NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

PETER DRAPER was President of the SAHGB 2000–2004, Honorary Editor Architectural History 1985–1992, member of the Cathedrals Fabric Commission for England, and is currently Visiting Professor in the School of History of Art, Film and Visual Media at Birkbeck, the department where he taught from 1969 until his recent retirement. His book The Formation of English Gothic: Architecture and Identity is to be published by Yale University Press in 2006.

CAROL DAVIDSON CRAGOE studied history at Smith College, art history at New York University's Institute of Fine Arts, and received her PhD in architectural history from Birkbeck College, University of London, where she worked on architecture and liturgy in twelfth- and thirteenth-century English parish churches. For several years Assistant Architectural editor at the Victoria County History, she now works for English Heritage.

TOM NICKSON completed a BA in Art History at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, with a dissertation on triumphal arches in Tudor England. In 2004, he won the Hawksmoor Essay Medal with an earlier version of the article printed here. He has just completed an MA in the Gothic Cathedral at the Courtauld Institute, where he remains to commence a PhD on Léon Cathedral in October 2005.

PETER GUILLERY is a Senior Historian for the Survey of London which continues from within the Research Department of English Heritage. His publications include The Small House in Eighteenth-Century London (Yale University Press, 2004).

JAMES WEEKS took his BA in Modern History at Christ Church, Oxford, then an MA in Architectural History at the Courtauld Institute, and whilst studying there, in 2003, won the Hawksmoor Essay Medal with an earlier version of the article published here. Since 2004 he has been working as a historic buildings conservation consultant at Alan Baxter & Associates, London

LUCY WORSLEY is Chief Curator at Historic Royal Palaces. Her book Cavalier: The biography of a seventeenth-century household will be published by Faber & Faber in 2006

BIANCA DE DIVITIIS wrote a dissertation on Pitzhanger Manor as an undergraduate in the Faculty of Architecture at the University of Naples. She is now completing her PhD in History of Architecture, with a thesis on fifteenth-century architectural patronage in Naples, at the School of Advanced Studies in Venice.

LOUIS CELLAURO studied Architecture at the Ecole d'Architecture de Lyon and History of Art at the Université Lyon Lumière, before moving to London where he was awarded an MA and a PhD from the Courtauld Institute of Art. He has been the recipient of several postdoctoral fellowships in the USA including two consecutive ones in 2003 and 2004 at the International Center for Jefferson Studies. He has published several academic articles, including in the Papers of the British School at Rome, Annali di Architettura, Arte Veneta and Studies in the History of Gardens and Designed Landscapes. He contributed to the exhibition 'Triumph of the Baroque: Architecture in Europe 1600–1750' (Turin, Washington DC, Montreal and Marseilles, 1999).

GILBERT RICHAUD studied Architecture at the Ecole d'Architecture de Lyon and History of Art at the Université Lyon Lumière. He is now a practising architect with his own office and is also finishing his doctoral dissertation on Gaspard André, a French architect of the late nineteenth century.

CHRISTOPHER WHITEHEAD is Lecturer in Museum, Gallery and Heritage Studies at the University of Newcastle. He holds a doctorate from the Scuola Normale Superiore in Pisa. He is the author of The Public Art Museum in Nineteenth Century Britain: The Development of the National Gallery (Ashgate 2005) and has special interests in the history and architecture of museums and galleries.

JIMENA CANALES is Assistant Professor in History of Science at Harvard University. She studies epistemological and psychological aspects of modern physical sciences, focusing on 19th-century physics, astronomy, and philosophy. Areas of interest include science and modernity, science and representation, science and architecture. Recent publications include: 'The Single Eye: Re-evaluating Ancien Régime Science', History of Science, 39 (2000); 'Exit the Frog, Enter the Human: Physiology and Experimental Psychology in Nineteenth-Century Astronomy', British Journal for the History of Science 34 (2001); 'Photogenic Venus: The "Cinematographic Turn" in Science and its Alternatives', Isis 93 (2002).

ANDREW HERSCHER is Assistant Professor at the University of Michigan with simultaneous appointments in the Taubman College of Architecture and Urban Planning, Department of the History of Art, and Department of Slavic Languages and Literatures. He is currently co-editing Conflict/Zones: Spatial Articulations of Violence and completing his own book, Violence Taking Place: The Architecture of the Kosovo Conflict.

JOHN THOMAS is a graduate of the Universities of Wales, Birmingham, London and Sheffield. He has written about historic architecture since 1975 (when his first research concerning Liverpool Cathedral and the work of Giles Gilbert Scott was published), and he has given many lectures and talks, both to societies and groups, and classes to the University of Birmingham and the Workers' Educational Association. He has written for Church Building.

ROBERT PROCTOR studied architectural history at Edinburgh and Cambridge, where his PhD thesis was on the Parisian Department Store, 1855 to 1914. He is now Lecturer in Architectural History at the Mackintosh School of Architecture, Glasgow School of Art, where he is working on the Gillespie Kidd and Coia archive.

MILES GLENDINNING is Director of the Scottish Centre for Conservation Studies at Edinburgh College of Art. He has co-authored numerous books on twentieth-century architecture, and is currently completing a major biography of Sir Robert Matthew.
