

McCormack, Takesada & Wada, Analysis on Korean Tension

Between 2012 and 2014 we posted a number of articles on contemporary affairs without giving them volume and issue numbers or dates. Often the date can be determined from internal evidence in the article, but sometimes not. We have decided retrospectively to list all of them as Volume 10, Issue 54 with a date of 2012 with the understanding that all were published between 2012 and 2014.

A luncheon event hosted by The Foreign Correspondents' Club of Japan (FCCJ)

Description: Last month the two sides of the Korean Peninsula came closer to full-scale conflict than at any time since the 1953 armistice that ended the war between them. Although both sides have pulled back from the brink, they remain in a state of hair-trigger tension amid florid saber rattling by Pyongyang and warnings from Seoul that it has reached the end of its patience.

The latest crisis was sparked by the shelling of the southern island Yeonpyeong, Pyongyang says the shelling – aimed at a military base – was provoked by military exercises on the southern side. Undeterred, Seoul plans more drills in the area.

The FCCJ has invited three distinguished scholars to discuss this issue:

-- Gavan McCormack, Emeritus Professor, The Australian National University (and Asia-Pacific Journal Coordinator)

-- Hideshi Takesada, Professor & Executive Director, The National Institute of Defense Studies

-- Haruki Wada, Professor Emeritus, The University of Tokyo (and Asia-Pacific Journal author)
