APPRENTICESHIP AT KURUMAN

OPPENHEIMER SERIES: 5

In the history of missionary activity in South Africa few names are better known than those of Robert Moffat and the station that he built up at Kuruman. This volume contains a selection of his reports, many hitherto unpublished, on the first eight years of his work at what was then a settlement far beyond the borders of the Cape Colony.

AFRICAN MORNING

R. O. HENNINGS

Mr. Hennings left Oxford in 1935 and went out to Kenya as a cadet in the Colonial Administrative Service; since then he has served in many parts of the colony. African Morning is the story of his experiences as a District Officer in the Lake Baringo region, a little-known corner of Kenya some two hundred miles from Nairobi. Mr. Hennings has an observant eye and a sense of humour; he presents a vivid picture of a delightfully self-reliant and cheerful people who, in the face of great changes elsewhere, have so far preferred not to change.

Illustrated. Demy 8vo. 16s.

ASIA AND THE WEST

MAURICE ZINKIN

That this important study is published under the auspices of the Institute of Pacific Relations is an earnest of its value to the economist and student of world affairs. The author argues that the immemorial peasant economy of the East is breaking down. Independence as such has not proved a talisman to bring automatic prosperity, and with disillusion comes the danger of Communism. The author surveys every country of Asia in turn, supporting his often surprising conclusions with all the relevant facts.
