PSYCHOLOGY IN UTOPIA

Toward a Social History of Soviet Psychology

Alex Kozulin

Alex Kozulin, who studied psychology in Moscow before he emigrated to the West in 1979, here decodes the real scientific content of Soviet work in psychology from its ideologically orthodox expression through four generations of researchers.

"Kozulin's fascinating book gives important insight into the relation of ideology to scholarship while documenting key trends, ideas and figures in the history of Soviet psychology. There is poignancy, ignominy and occasional heroism to be found in the chronicle—and both irony and humor to be found in the chronicler's attitude toward his subject."—Sigmund Koch, Boston University

Variously controlled in recent times by Austria, Hungary, and Rumania, Transylvania typifies the problems associated with great power conflict, shifting cultural dominations, and ethnic group rivalries within a region. The essays in this book are important contributions to Eastern European studies and to the wider questions of inter-ethnic conflict.

In addition to the essays on the historical, cultural, political, and legal aspects of majority-minority relations in Transylvania from the Middle Ages to the present, the volume includes a chronology of Transylvania history, statistical tables, and maps, as well as an appendix of significant recent documents bearing on the problem of ethnic conflict in the area.

SOVIET STUDIES

THE USSR AND THE MUSLIM WORLD

Yaacov Ro'i, Ed.

The large and rapidly increasing Muslim population of the USSR is putting an immense strain on the Soviet political system, both domestically and internationally. This collection of essays provides a comprehensive overview of the ideological, political, sociological, and economic dimensions of both internal and international Soviet-Muslim relations.
