The Fourth Edition of this work is due to be published in June, 1958. It has been thoroughly revised in the light of developments since the third edition appeared in 1954, but retains all the attractive features which have helped this book to gain its world-wide reputation.

Reviews of the Third Edition :

"The author . . . has an all too rare knack of writing on international law in an attractive way. . . . It is 480 pages of extremely well done work, with all those pages filled with exactly what a new reader will want to know. . . . Recommended to all those who, by reason of their work or by reason of the compulsion of examination, wish to gain a working knowledge of this ever-growing subject."—The Law Times.

"It would be difficult to find a clearer and more accurate view of international law today than that afforded in these pages."—
American Journal of International Law.

"The author possesses wide learning which he puts to good use. The book can be recommended with confidence."—The Cambridge Review.

". . . comparatively free of theoretical and controversial matter, of lesser bulk than the standard works intended for specialists but ample for the needs of those whose work and studies require a grasp of the general principles and practice of international law. This book can be warmly commended."—British Year Book of International Law.

This new edition of Sir Thomas Erskine May's great work incorporates all the changes of the past seven years, and makes a timely appearance in view of the creation of new Parliaments within the Commonwealth and the development of others.

There has been thorough revision throughout the work but, in spite of the drastic elimination of obsolete passages, the inclusion of fresh material makes the new edition nearly a hundred pages longer than its predecessor.

"Erskine May's monumental guide to the law and custom of Parliament has become so completely accepted as the infallible authority. . . . It is not putting it too high to say that Erskine May is indispensable to the conduct not only of the Parliament of Westminster but to all those others which have been set up in the Commonwealth and Empire."—
