Studies presented to E. T. Leeds
DARK-AGE BRITAIN
Edited by D. B. Harden

The archaeology of Dark-Age Britain has received much attention from scholars in recent years and great advances in our knowledge have taken place. Here, in a book dedicated to E. T. Leeds, the doyen of British Dark-Age archaeologists who died while it was still in the press, leading authorities review some aspects of the results in fourteen papers. There are three sections: (1) the Roman and Celtic Survival, (2) the Invasions and the pagan Saxons, (3) the later Saxon and Viking Age. The volume is profusely illustrated in half-tone and line.

EDMOND VERMEIL

The Professor Emeritus at the Sorbonne and the Institute of Political Studies, gives one of the most penetrating analyses yet published. From Bismarckian foundations the development of the Reich is examined in all the varying political, economic, cultural, and ideological circumstances of World War I, the Weimar Republic, the disastrous inflation, and the rise of Hitler. Professor Vermeil concludes with a brief survey of present conditions and suggests lines of thought for the future. Line maps. 25s. (Late Sept.)

W. N. MEDLICOTT

The Balkan and Mediterranean problems of the early 'eighties, which rivalled in their complexity and publicity the Near Eastern 'question' of the late 'seventies, are here examined by Professor Medlicott in terms of the conflict of aims and personal mistrust which divided the two statesmen during the negotiations of the crucial period 1879-82. September 35s. net

Polish Politics and the Revolution of November 1830

R. F. LESLIE

Dr Leslie has based this study of the last challenge of the old Poland to the Russian hegemony in Eastern Europe almost entirely on Polish and Russian sources. His narrative of the revolutionary war is preceded by a detailed analysis of the political, economic, and social condition of early nineteenth-century Poland. 37s. 6d. net

Theobald, Archbishop of Canterbury

A. SALTMAN

The first full account of Theobald's life and achievement, supplemented by the texts of 311 of his charters. Economic Problems of the Church

From Archbishop Whitgift to the Long Parliament

CHRISTOPHER HILL

Historians have devoted much attention recently to the economic problems of land-owners in the two generations before 1640. Meanwhile ecclesiastical conflicts have continued to be discussed in terms of 'Puritan' opposition to episcopacy. But the Church was also an economic organization with its own economic problems. 42s. net

Country Banking in the Industrial Revolution

L. S. PRESSNELL

'In presenting this well-documented account of the role of the country banks between 1760 and 1844, Dr Pressnell has successfully completed a task that would have daunted many lesser spirits. . . . The outcome of his labours is a first-class piece of scholarship and research; it has much enriched knowledge of the evolution of the financial mechanism and has opened up many promising avenues for further research.' The Economist 70s. net
