Deterrent or Defense

B. H. Liddell Hart. Praeger. 257 pp. $4.95.

A leading military authority addresses himself to the problem of finding a replacement for the "fading deterrent" of nuclear arms. His analysis includes technical evaluations of small atomic weapons, gas, conventional forces, "amphibious flexibility" and, most notably, a thorough consideration of NATO and its potential as the best "non-suicidal form of defense" available to the West.

Marxism: The View from America

Clinton Rossiter. Harcourt, Brace. 338 pp. $6.75.

In an "exposition, confrontation and criticism" of the Marxist idea, Professor Rossiter undertakes to explain why "this giant new theory of the nineteenth century—now the giant new religion of the twentieth . . . never had a chance in America."

NATO in the 1960's

Alastair Buchan. Praeger. 131 pp. $3.

A former editor and correspondent, now Director of London's Institute for Strategic Studies, Mr. Buchan argues for a greater degree of diversification and interdependence among the NATO allies in the present decade.

Frontiers in American Democracy

Eugene J. McCarthy. World. 155 pp. $3.75.

In his first volume of essays, Senator McCarthy reflects on the theoretical basis of democracy, the American attitude toward politicians, the condition of liberalism, the role of religion and morality in politics, the two-party system, and such issues of the day as foreign policy and civil liberties.

The Future as History

Robert L. Heilbroner. Harper. 217 pp. $4.

In the belief that "an inability to see the future in an historic context" is at the root of our present anxiety, the author explores the forces of change in the evolution of the Western tradition in order to mark "the dynamic of contemporary history."

The End of Ideology

Daniel Bell. The Free Press. 416 pp. $7.50.

A disquisition on "the exhaustion of political ideas in the fifties," this book by a prominent social scientist traces the demise of the various intellectual systems that have served as rallying points for American aspirations, and charts the direction of new attitudes that have arisen in their course.
