ADMINISTRATIVE JUSTICE

Advocacy and Change in a Government Agency

Philippe Nonet

A case study of the interrelationships of law, politics, and administration, this volume traces the progressive transformation of the California Industrial Accident Commission from a welfare agency with broad discretion in making and interpreting its own policies into a relatively passive arbitrator of disputes over industrial accident claims. It provides a sound basis for interpretive generalizations about the relationship of law to organizational and administrative change.

THE UNEASY PARTNERSHIP

Social Science and the Federal Government in the Twentieth Century

Gene M. Lyons

The role of the social sciences—and social scientists—in shaping public policy has attracted much attention and some criticism in recent years. This book in effect argues for strengthening the role of social sciences in the federal government and calls for a central organization for the social sciences and for better integration of research within the federal agencies.

LAW, SOCIETY, AND INDUSTRIAL JUSTICE

Philip Selznick

The author examines legal and moral development in a study of "private government" in the light of sociological jurisprudence. He analyzes the "legal worth" of recent institutional changes and emphasizes that no pattern of social justice can create industrial justice. The spread of legal ideals to special-purpose institutions, argues Dr. Selznick, says more about historical opportunity than about new forms of oppression.

decision-making in the U. S. and Russia:

Two penetrating new studies from Bobbs-Merrill

DISPASSIONATE JUSTICE

A Synthesis of the Judicial Opinions of Robert H. Jackson
Edited by GLENDON SCHUBERT

"A new standard for the analysis of individual judicial behavior is set with the publication of this analysis of Justice Jackson's decision-making."
—SHELDON GOLDMAN, University of Massachusetts

An articulate, witty spokesman for conservatism, Justice Jackson was concerned with issues that are the here and now of our nation: the limits of civil liberties, social stability, economic justice, policy-making by judges, and the role of the legal profession itself. This volume makes available for the first time a wide selection of Jackson's thought and judicial opinions.

"This . . . is no mere loving presentation of the opinions of an admired judge. Schubert adds his own penetrating contributions both in a substantial introduction to the whole book, and in linking commentaries full of insight throughout."
—JULIUS STONE, University of Sydney, Australia

POLITICAL POWER IN THE SOVIET UNION

A Study of Decision-Making in Stalingrad
by PHILIP D. STEWART

A study of a typical regional Party committee, this book is the first to examine intensively the structure of power and influence at the local levels of the Soviet Communist Party. Stewart provides a detailed analysis of the makeup and daily functioning of each organ in the regional party framework and the degree of local autonomy permitted under "democratic centralism." Through scrupulous examination of the men who occupy important positions in the Soviet system, Stewart presents the most thorough analysis available of the career patterns of regional first Party secretaries in the period from the mid-1950's to the mid-1960's.

". . . a significant contribution to the on-going effort to wed Russian studies to empirical political sciences. It's also interesting as a case study, showing what can be accomplished by exhaustively treating a carefully defined sector of Soviet politics. A very exciting venture."

THE SEARCH FOR AN ABORTIONIST

Nancy Howell Lee

How is the demand for abortion met in American society? What are the social-structural connections that allow the buyers and sellers of this illegal service to locate and deal with each other, yet keep the practice of abortion almost invisible to the society as a whole? The Search for an Abortionist is the first detailed empirical study of the whole range of factors — psychological, social, medical, financial, and legal — which affect the woman who seeks to end an unwanted pregnancy. 1969 LC: 74-75135 280 pages $7.50

LAW WITHOUT PRECEDENT

Legal Ideas in Action in the Courts of Colonial Busoga

Lloyd A. Fallers

The Basoga are an African people intensely preoccupied with litigation. Fallers's book is a detailed and thoughtful exposition of their interesting legal system, one which is conducted without resort to precedent, at least in any conscious or explicit sense. The book analyzes the manner in which litigants and judges frame their arguments, examine each other, and isolate issues for discussion. In this process, they engage in legal reasoning, making use of "secondary rules" and "categorizing concepts" similar to the kind found by H. L. A. Hart and E. H. Levi in Anglo-American law. The book demonstrates how an institution for social control can be "legal" without overt communication about the application of rules, without precedent or legislation.

CONFLICTS AND TENSIONS IN ISLAMIC JURISPRUDENCE

Noel J. Coulson

The conflicting interests of stability and change in law is a problem common to all the world's legal systems. But nowhere is the problem of adapting established law to the changing standards and values of society more acute than in contemporary Islam. Islamic law — as a manifestation of divine will — has known continuity and a settled form for more than twelve centuries. Coulson examines the principal currents of Islamic legal thought through a series of conflicting concepts. The six polarizations he devises are revelation and reason, unity and diversity, authority and liberty, idealism and realism, law and morality, and stability and change. Publications of the Center for Middle Eastern Studies series, William R. Polk, General Editor.

THE LEGAL PROCESS FROM A BEHAVIORAL PERSPECTIVE

By STUART S. NAGEL, University of Illinois

This text brings together a series of studies which deal with various aspects of the legal process in general and the judicial process in particular, written from a unifying behavioral perspective. Legal policies and decisions are viewed in their total context as both effects and causes in the first book to apply the concepts and methodology of modern behavioralism to a broad set of important legal problems.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE LEGAL SYSTEM

By JAY A. SIGLER, Rutgers, The State University

In this text, a systems analysis approach, applied consistently and comprehensively, reveals the flow of decision-making within our legal system. Every major facet of the American legal system — not just the Supreme Courts or federal courts — is treated in an approach which emphasizes the social role of the judicial process. This volume shows the relationship of the legal and social systems to each other in the American context.

AFFIRMATIVE SCHOOL INTEGRATION

Efforts to Overcome De Facto Segregation in Urban Schools

Edited by ROSCOE HILL, Yale University, and MALCOLM FEELEY,
New York University

With a Foreword by JAMES S. COLEMAN, Johns Hopkins University

A comparative analysis of eight case studies on the legal and political problems complicating the elimination of de facto school segregation in eight northern American cities which were originally prepared as background for Equality of Educational Opportunity (the "Coleman Report"). The greater portion of the material compiled for these studies has never been published (not even by the government!).

This volume covers for each of the eight cities (Evanston, Berkeley, New Haven, Pasadena, St. Louis, Albany, San Francisco, and Chicago) the following questions: (1) What specific issues arose in the context of the particular city studied? (2) How did school boards handle the issues? (3) When action was taken by the board, where did the proposal originate and how was it subsequently modified? (4) What role did the courts play? (5) Did the question of the legality and/or morality of distributing school children by race come up? Who raised it? How was it resolved? (6) Did the board succeed in (a) achieving significant statistical change in racial imbalance, and (b) in resolving community conflict over the issue?

The book also contains multi-disciplinary review essays of recent studies on race and education, and a selective bibliography on de facto school segregation. Contributors include: William G. Buss, Jr., William Cohen, James S. Coleman, John E. Coons, Ira Michael Heyman, Harold Horowitz, John Kaplan, Robert Marden, Ralph Reisner, Arnold Rose, Richard D. Schwartz, Michael Usdan, Clement Vose, and Meyer Weinberg.

AFFIRMATIVE SCHOOL INTEGRATION is based upon the November, 1967 issue of the Law and Society Review, and is published in cooperation with the Law and Society Association.
