

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

PAUL BURSTEIN is an Associate Professor of Sociology at the University of Washington, Seattle. This paper continues his work on equal employment opportunity that is presented most broadly in his book Discrimination, Jobs, and Politics (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1985).

SHELDON EKLAND-OLSON is an Associate Professor at the University of Texas, Austin. He has published articles on social networks, movements, and control. He is currently finishing work with Steve J. Martin on The Walls Came Tumbling Down, a study of litigated institutional reform in the Texas prison system.

JOHN F. GALLIHER is a Professor of Sociology at the University of Missouri-Columbia. His long-term interest in the origins of substance prohibitions is reflected in a recent book, Morals Legislation without Morality (New Brunswick: Rutgers University Press, 1983), which he wrote with John R. Cross.

HELGI GUNNLAUGSSON is a graduate of the University of Iceland, Reykjavik, and is a Ph.D. candidate in sociology at the University of Missouri-Columbia.

RICHARD J. MAIMAN is a Professor of Political Science at the University of Southern Maine, Portland, where he teaches courses in the Law School and Public Policy Program as well as in the undergraduate college. His research interests include juvenile courts, civil liberties and constitutional law, and mediation in civil courts.

CRAIG A. MCEWEN is an Associate Professor of Sociology and Assistant Dean of the Faculty at Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine. His research interests include juvenile corrections, tax compliance, and mediation in civil courts. His recent collaborative work with Richard Maiman has been published in the Maine Law Review, Policy Studies Journal, Law & Policy, and Law & Society Review.

J. L. MILLER is Assistant Professor of Sociology at Purdue University. Her research interests in criminal law and justice include the development of justice models, criminal sentencing, and the judgment-making process.

KATHLEEN MONAGHAN is a graduate student in sociology at Vanderbilt University, Nashville.

BARBARA RESKIN is a Professor of Sociology at the University of Illinois. With Gary LaFree of the University of New Mexico and Christy A. Visher, she has been studying the factors that influenced jurors in sexual assault cases, with special attention to the effects of victims' conformity to traditional sex roles and jurors' sex-role attitudes. She and Visher are also examining the effects of victims' characteristics on whether jurors hold victims responsible for their assault. In another study, she is investigating the factors underlying the change between 1970 and 1980, in sex compositions of several male-dominated occupations.

PETER H. ROSSI is the Stuart A. Rice Professor of Sociology and the Director of the Social and Demographic Research Institute at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. He was the 1985 recipient of the Common Wealth Award for Career Contributions to Sociology. His research has largely been concerned with the application of social research methods to social issues. He is currently engaged in research on criminal justice, the homeless, and American kinship.

JON E. SIMPSON is Professor of Sociology at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. His research interests focus on public responses to crime, official data systems, and weapons and violent crime.

CHRISTY A. VISHER is Research Associate with the Committee on Research on Law Enforcement and the Administration of Justice at the National Research Council, the research arm of the National Academy of Sciences. Her research interests include juror decision making, criminal careers, police arrest decisions, and public policy issues in criminal justice.