
About the Authors

Kitty Calavita is the immediate past president of the Law and Society Association. She is a Professor in the Department of Criminology, Law and Society in the School of Social Ecology at the University of California, Irvine. She has written extensively on immigration law and policy historically and cross-nationally; white-collar crime; and a range of other issues relating to law, power, and ideology. Her latest articles include “Blue Jeans, Rape, and the De-constitutive Power of Law” (Law & Society Review, 2001); “The Paradoxes of Race, Class, Identity, and ‘Passing’: Enforcing the Chinese Exclusion Acts, 1882–1910” (Law and Social Inquiry, 2000); and “Immigration, Law, and Marginalization in a Global Economy: Notes from Spain” (Law & Society Review, 1998). Her current research examines contemporary immigration policy in Italy and Spain and explores the political-economic tensions associated with constructions of immigrant “otherness.”

Robert Dingwall is Professor of Sociology and Director of the Institute for the Study of Genetics, Biorisks and Society at the University of Nottingham. He received a Ph.D. in medical sociology from the University of Aberdeen in 1974 and has worked at the Centre for Socio-Legal Studies at the University of Oxford and, as a visitor, at the American Bar Foundation. Within the law and society field, he has carried out research on agency decision-making in child abuse and neglect, medical negligence and asbestos disease litigation, the legal profession, and divorce mediation. Since 1997 he has been developing a research and graduate centre for the study of the social, cultural, ethical, and legal implications of biological sciences and technologies.

Mary Durfee writes on international relations theory and on the Great Lakes of North America. She is a member of the Lake Superior Binational Forum and has served as a consultant to the EPA’s Science Advisory Board and to NSF’s Interdisciplinary Graduate Education and Research Traineeship (IGERT) program. Normally a professor in the Social Sciences Department, she is currently an administrator.

Thomas G. Hansford is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Government and International Studies at the University of South Carolina. His research has been published in the Journal of Politics, Political Research Quarterly, and American Politics Quarterly.

Robert M. Howard is a lawyer as well as a political scientist. He received his J.D. degree from Suffolk University Law School in Boston and his Ph.D. from the State University of New York at Stony Brook. Dr. Howard's research is in American and judicial politics, with a special emphasis on the influence of courts on bureaucratic behavior and policy. He has published, or has forthcoming, articles in leading journals of law and political science, including the Journal of Politics, Political Research Quarterly, Social Science Quarterly, American Politics Research, and Law & Society Review.

Paul Huck received his B.A. from Marquette University and his Ph.D. in Economics from Northwestern University. He now works as an economist for the Chicago branch of the Federal Reserve Bank.

Joe Rollins is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at Queens College, CUNY, and a member of the Board of Directors of the Center for Lesbian and Gay Studies (CLAGS). His research emphasizes sexuality, law, and HIV disease. He is currently finishing his first book, Ironic Jurisprudence, and is working on a study of sexuality and citizenship with H. N. Hirsch of Macalester College.

Jeffrey A. Segal is Professor of Political Science at Stony Brook University. He has a Ph.D. in political science from Michigan State University. His books include Majority Rule or Minority Will: Adherence to Precedent on the U.S. Supreme Court (1999) and The Supreme Court and the Attitudinal Model Revisited (2002), both with Harold J. Spaeth.

Carroll Seron is a Professor in the School of Public Affairs at Baruch College and the Department of Sociology at the Graduate Center, City University of New York. She is the author of numerous articles and books on courts and the legal profession. Currently, she is conducting a study of police brutality and just punishment for police brutality that is funded by the National Science Foundation. The goal of the study is to examine the normative dimensions of police brutality and just punishment for brutality in the eyes of the public and whether and to what extent there are significant differences by race and ethnicity.

Jonathan Simon is Professor of Law at the University of Miami. He is currently completing a book on the role of criminal law in transforming American governance.

Grażyna Skąpska is Professor of Sociology and Law and Society at the Department of Sociology, Faculty of Philosophy, Jagiellonian University, Kraków, Poland. Her research is focused on postcommunist transformation, privatization and restitution of property, attitudes toward the past atrocities committed by oppressive regimes, and postcommunist constitutionalism. Her empirical work is subordinated to broader issues of epistemology in social science.

James F. Spriggs, II is an Associate Professor of Political Science who studies American politics, with an emphasis on judicial process and politics. Along with his Cambridge University Press book, Crafting Law on the Supreme Court: The Collegial Game (2000), he has published articles in the American Journal of Political Science, Journal of Politics, Political Research Quarterly, and American Politics Quarterly

Marco Verweij is a senior research fellow at the Max Planck Project Group on Common Goods. He is the author of Transboundary Environmental Problems and Cultural Theory: The Protection of the Rhine and the Great Lakes, and is currently writing a book entitled A Snowball against Global Warming, or, What to Do after the Breakdown of the Kyoto Protocol. His research interests include international environmental issues, the development of renewable energy, and the functioning of multilateral organizations.

Ronald F. Wright received his B.A. from the College of William and Mary in 1981 and his J.D. from Yale University in 1984. He now works as a Professor of Law at Wake Forest University.