
About the Authors

William J. Bowers is Principal Research Scientist at the College of Criminal Justice, Northeastern University. He has written two books, Executions in America and Legal Homicide, as well as numerous articles about capital punishment. Currently, he is the Principal Investigator of the National Science Foundation-sponsored Capital Jury Project underway in 15 states.

Yoav Dotan is Assistant Professor at the Faculty of Law, Hebrew University, Jerusalem. His areas of interest are public law, law and politics, and the study of cause lawyers. Current research involves a study of government lawyers and their relationships with cause lawyers and interest groups.

Joel Peter Eigen is Charles A. Dana Professor of Sociology at Franklin and Marshall College. His book, Witnessing Insanity: Madness and Mad-Doctors in the English Court, received the 1997 Manfred S. Guttmacher Prize for “distinguished contributions to the field of forensic psychiatry.” In addition to his work on the evolution of medical testimony in common law courts, his research interests include juvenile justice jurisprudence and differentials in homicide sentencing.

Michele Landis is a graduate student in sociology at Northwestern University and a 1998 graduate of Northwestern Law School. In 1998–99, she served as a judicial clerk to United States Circuit Judge Stephen Reinhardt. She is interested primarily in the intersection of the sociology of knowledge and the history of the welfare state. She is currently a dissertation fellow at the American Bar Foundation.

Assaf Likhovski is a lecturer in the Faculty of Law at Tel Aviv University. His research interests include the intellectual history of English and American law and the history of colonial legal systems and of taxation. He is currently working on a book on the legal history of mandatory Palestine.

Austin Sarat is William Nelson Cromwell Professor of Jurisprudence & Political Science at Amherst College, Past President of the Law and Society Association, and Chair of the Working Group on Law, Culture and the Humanities. He is, in addition, author or editor of more than 20 books, including Divorce Lawyers and Their Clients: Power and Meaning in the Legal Process (with William Felstiner), Law and the Domains of Culture and History, Memory, and the Law (both co-edited with Thomas Kearns), Race, Law, and Culture: Reflections on Brown v. Board of Education and The Killing State: Capital Punishment in Law,

Politics, and Culture. In 1997 he received the Harry Kalven Award given by the Law and Society Association for “distinguished research on law and society.” His current research focuses on cause lawyering and the state, the culture life of capital punishment, and law in popular culture.

Benjamin D. Steiner is Research Associate in the College of Criminal Justice and a doctoral candidate in sociology at Northeastern University. His dissertation investigates how the racialization of crime and criminality in American culture influences the judgments of capital jurors in death penalty cases.

Martha Merrill Umphrey is Assistant Professor of Law, Jurisprudence & Social Thought at Amherst College. In her current research she draws on literary and cultural theory to explore legal representations of identity and responsibility in the late 19th- and early 20th-century United States.

Adelaide H. Villmoare teaches political science and American culture courses at Vassar College. She focuses her research on law in everyday life and on feminist jurisprudence.