THE DYNAMICS OF ONE PARTY DOMINANCE

The PAP at the Grass-roots

Chan Heng Chee

This book seeks to understand the workings of national politics in Singapore and the hegemony of the People's Action Party Government through a micro-level analysis of the political system. It represents the first systematic exploration of the relationship between the governors and the governed—of how people are ruled—through an investigation of local interests, the party organization, local non-party institutions, the local bases of support, and the management of local issues. The dynamics of politics at the grass-roots is then related back to the macro-level development.

The author shows how the political base is structured and a petitionary political culture is nurtured to buttress the existing political system.

THE TOWKAYS OF SABAH

Chinese Leadership and Indigenous Challenge in the Last Phase of British Rule

Edwin Lee

This book considers the role of prominent Chinese traders and leaders in relation to the emergence of an indigenous nationalist elite. The period covered is the eventful one from Crown Colony to Malaysia. Essential reading for those who want to know more about Sabah's recent past, current Malaysian affairs, and the success and dilemma associated with the Chinese in Southeast Asia.

BIBLIOGRAFI MINANGKABAU

Asma & Mochtar Naim

This Bibliografi Minangkabau is intended to be a comprehensive bibliography covering all written sources on Minangkabau (including Negeri Sembilan) up to the present.

It is a continuation of two earlier bibliographies by M. Joustra and S. Tideman. However, the present classification differs from the earlier bibliographies in that entries are arranged by disciplines instead of in chronological order. The sources in the earlier bibliographies were reclassified and incorporated into this revision. Other bibliographical sources, and entries on theses and dissertations, are also included.

A STORY OF MAJAPAHIT

Slametmuljana

Inscriptions in the Old-Javanese language, Chinese Chronicles of the Yuan and Ming dynasties and historical writings of the Nagarakretagama, the Pararaton and others form the basis of this book.

The collection of these historical accounts of the period between the thirteenth and middle of the fifteenth century gives the story of the foundation, the golden age, and decline of the great empire of Majapahit with the coming of Islam. The detailed description of the era keeps very close to the historical sources and provides the reader with a great deal of material which has not been published before.

ASIAN Thought & Society: An International Review

Asian Thought & Society is a forum of international opinion on theoretical issues which have arisen through the impact of an entire spectrum of intellectual trends. It is especially concerned with socialist and Communist theories and related doctrines, and includes analyses of social structures and changes in Pacific and South Asian countries.

Main emphasis is on world-view, philosophy, religious and ethical values, evolution of the arts, politico-economic doctrines, anthropo-sociological theories, and, in general, problems of cultural development in Asia. Contributors are invited to examine problems of cross-cultural communication from all points of view and particularly from that of the impact of contemporary ideologies and the process of modernization on traditional and/or current thought and society.

Asian Thought & Society will attempt to carry regularly at least one item on each of three sub-regions: East, South, and Southeast Asia.

Furthermore, ATS has organized a special Profile editorial board to sum up the major issues and events that take place in the intervals between issues of our journal. The synthesis, which will not be mere chronology, is undertaken by pooling the efforts of expertise from varied fields and is composed either by the Editor-in-Chief or his invitee on the basis of input from the Profile editorial board. Although the members on the board are renown scholars having access to the first-hand research materials, they do recognize their limitations. Therefore, ATS openly invites suggestions and information on the relevant issues and events in those areas it covers. The data provided, however, should not be longer than four pages; and ATS will acknowledge such information and inspiration publicly in our journal as the space permits.

All contributions (English, French, German, and Spanish acceptable; include one original and two copies) and communications should be sent to Ignatius J. H. Ts'ao, Department of Political Science, SUNY-Oneonta, New York 13820, U.S.A., or to Helmut Dahm, Bundesinstitut, Lindenbornstrasse 22, 5 Koln 30, Federal Republic of Germany. As to communications on book reviews on South and Southeast Asia, however, they should be sent to Justus M. van der Kroef, Dept. of Political Science, the University of Bridgeport, Bridgeport, Conn 06602. (All contributions must be accompanied with stamped and self-addressed acknowledgement of receipt and manuscript return envelope.)

All publications in ATS reflect only the views of the authors. While the Editors accept responsibility for the selection of materials to be published, the individual author is responsible for statements of fact and expressions of opinion contained therein.

ATS appears in April, September, and December. Subscriptions should be sent to Department of Political Science, State University of New York, Oneonta, New York, 13820 U.S.A. The institutional rate is $20.00 per year and the individual rate is $10.00, postage included, for North and South America, Asia, and Africa by surface mail; $22.00 and $11.00 institutional and individual rates respectively for Europe and Oceania. Add $13.00 for air mail to all countries and to all rates. Individual copies are $3.50; off-set articles are $.65 per copy and $.50 per copy when ordering more than 10 copies.

SOUTHEAST ASIAN AFFAIRS 1976

Southeast Asian Affairs 1976, third in the series, places special emphasis on the ASEAN countries, while other countries in the Southeast Asian region and topics pertaining to them are not entirely neglected. The publication aims primarily at giving the enquiring reader and student a broad grasp of current regional affairs. Readable and easily understood analyses are made of the major political, economic, social and strategic developments within Southeast Asia. The result has been a collection of essays in which the facts and the accompanying analyses are presented in a simple and interesting fashion.

Southeast Asian Affairs 1976 presents two broad groups of contributions. There are those which highlight and, if necessary, explain the main political, economic and social events and developments of the year in individual countries and for the region as a whole. These papers are supported by articles dealing with issues of current interest but not necessarily relating to the calendar year 1975. Contributors to the volume represent a broad spectrum of disciplines and come from a wide diversity of countries, but the majority are Southeast Asians.

Although the subject matter is quite extensive in range, the articles generally focus on the more important questions in the political, economic and social fields that have been of relevance to the region. These questions refer, for instance, to the Vietnam War and its aftermath—including the changing balance of political power in the region and its security aspects—the relationship between the Southeast Asian countries and the People's Republic of China, great power influences in the region, and maritime problems and policies. In conformity with the prevailing mood of many governments of the region, problems of national unity and of national language, and economic and social developments have also been treated at length in some of the articles.
