1989, 720 pp. ISBN 90-6544-380-0
Hardbound Dfl. 168.00/£54.00/US$75.00

The publication is designed as a law school casebook and contains edited versions of over 75 cases, conventions and statutes. Cases and materials in the publication are followed by annotations and questions, which are designed to facilitate classroom discussions. The casebook is well-suited for use as a course book in a second or third-year course on international litigation. The experience of the authors and others who have used the materials has been that students need not have taken prior international law courses, although their having done so does not preclude participation in the course. The book is designed so that it will also be suited for use as a treatise, appropriate for both practitioners and students. In addition to excerpted cases and questions, the publication contains detailed introductory materials, annotations and commentary. These materials include practical pointers about transnational litigation, as well as more academic treatment of issues of international comity, federalism versus foreign relations concerns, and the proper role of U.S. courts.
