CONTRIBUTORS

GRACIA CLARK is an Assistant Professor of Anthropology at Indiana University. She started her fieldwork with market women in Kumasi in 1978 (for a doctorate at the University of Cambridge) and has since expanded into development and gender studies. In 1994 she published Onions are my Husband.

HARRI ENGLUND is a Research Fellow at the Nordic Africa Institute in Uppsala. His monograph on the processes of war and displacement on the Malawi-Mozambique borderland is being prepared for publication.

BARBARA MEIER is a Research Associate at the Institute of Ethnology in the University of Münster and is now studying religious change among northern Ghanaian migrants. Her doctoral thesis was published in 1993 as Doglientiri. Frauengemeinschaften in westfrikianischen Verwandtschaftssystemen, dargestellt am Beispiel der Balsa in Nordghana.

PETER PROBST, formerly at the Anthropology Department of the Free University of Berlin, teaches at the African Studies Centre (Iwalewa House), University of Bayreuth. He is doing fieldwork in the Central Province of Malawi and is preparing for publication Ritual Performances and the Dynamics of Territorialisation in Central Malawi and (co-edited with J. G. Deutsch and H. Schmidt) African Modernities.

JESSE RIBOT is a research associate at the Harvard Center for Population and Development Studies. In 1990 he co-authored (with Anne Bergeret) L'Arbre nourricier en pays sahélien and in 1996 (with Antonio Rocha Magalhães and Stahis Panagides) he co-edited Climate Change, Climate Variability and Social Vulnerability in the Semi-arid Tropics.

RICHARD SCHROEDER teaches in the Department of Geography and is Director of African Studies at Rutgers University. He is the author of Shady Practices: agroforestry and gender politics in the Gambia and (with Vigdis Broch-Due) co-editor of Producing Nature and Poverty in Africa: both are to be published shortly.
