A Landmark Contribution to the Legal Profession

THE LEGAL NEEDS OF THE PUBLIC:
THE FINAL REPORT OF A NATIONAL SURVEY

by Barbara A. Curran

Senior Research Attorney, American Bar Foundation

A joint undertaking of the American Bar Foundation and the American Bar Association's Special Committee to Survey the Legal Needs of the Public.

This first comprehensive survey of legal needs addresses the questions:

To what extent do people have problems for which legal services may be useful?

What is the extent of use and nonuse of lawyers?

What is the nature of the use?

What kinds of lawyers are sought?

How are they chosen?

What is the public's reaction to legal costs?

What are the attitudes of the public toward lawyers and toward the legal system generally?

These and many other questions are examined not only for the public at large but also for various demographic subgroups based on age, race, sex, education, income, occupation, geographic location, and combinations of these factors.

The results reported are based on statistical analyses of data obtained in one- to two-hour personal interviews with each of 2,064 Americans scientifically sampled to represent the experiences and opinions of the adult population.

A perceptive analysis of prepaid legal service plans

LEGAL SERVICE PLANS: APPROACHES TO REGULATION

By Werner Pfennigstorf and Spencer L. Kimball

This two-year study conducted by the American Bar Foundation under a grant from the National Science Foundation suggests answers to many of the unsettled issues concerning legal service plans that are facing the bar, consumers of legal services, sponsors of legal service plans, legislators, and regulators of such plans.

Prepaid legal service plans are new and complex. There is little experience on which to rely in regulating them. They bring together in a bewildering variety of combinations persons, organizations, and legal relationships that have traditionally been treated separately: the practice of law, labor relations, insurance institutions, and membership relations of many kinds.

These complicated, interwoven relationships are unraveled in the principal reports and background papers presented in Legal Service Plans: Approaches to Regulation.

Practicing attorneys and plan sponsors will benefit by gaining a better understanding of legal service plans that will enable them to respond more effectively to the needs of beneficiaries and to anticipate problems, dangers, and regulatory requirements.

Legislators and legal service plan regulators will find the conceptual framework to help them design and administer a system of regulation that protects consumers without discouraging innovation and experimentation in the delivery and financing of legal services.

Werner Pfennigstorf is Research Attorney, American Bar Foundation. Spencer L. Kimball is Professor of Law, University of Chicago, and Executive Director, American Bar Foundation.
