The Oxford Companion to Law

David M. Walker

This new Oxford Companion is a compendium of information about the branches of legal science, legal systems, institutions such as courts and juries, notable judges and jurists, legal concepts and ideas, major legal principles and important documents and cases. Much of the information is not readily available anywhere else, and the book is essential for teachers, students, and practitioners of law. £17.50

Principles of Public International Law

Ian Brownlie

This new edition has been thoroughly revised to reflect recent developments in various areas of the law, including the law of the sea, state immunity, and the status of foreign investments. It provides a comprehensive account of the law of peace based upon the modern practice of states and international organizations and the jurisprudence of international tribunals. Third edition £17.50 paper covers £10.50

The British Year Book of International Law 1978

Volume XLIX

Edited by R. Y. Jennings and Ian Brownlie

This volume contains articles by D. W. Bowett, Lucius C. Caffisch, Felice Morgenstern, Malcom Shaw, D. M. McRae, Theodor Meron. It includes an entirely new section containing materials which evidence the practice of the United Kingdom in international law matters during 1978. £30

Law, Morality, and Society

Essays in Honour of H. L. A. Hart

Edited by P. M. S. Hacker and J. Raz

The Cambridge Law Journal wrote of this book when it was first published in 1977 that it was 'a most fitting offering to a scholar whose contribution to twentieth-century jurisprudence it would prove hard to exaggerate. . . . The conjunction of philosophers, lawyers, and anthropologists has proven most successful. The contributors are virtually all of a uniformly high calibre.' This is an unrevised paperback reprint. £3.95

Legislative Series

The Legislative Series is a periodical prepared by a specialised service of the International Labour Office and has been issued without interruption since the ILO was founded in 1919. It contains reprints or translations of selected labour and social security laws recently enacted throughout the world. Parallel editions are produced in French and Spanish. The twice-yearly numbers are issued in a binding enabling the texts to be kept together in this form or broken up and grouped together according to individual requirements. The subscription includes an annual supplement, containing a subject index to the texts printed in the Legislative Series during the year, and a chronological list, by country, of all legislation of lasting interest that has come to the knowledge of the ILO.

Law-Making in Australia

Edited by Alice Erh-Soon Tay and Eugene Kamenka

There is today an increasingly widespread recognition of major and even fundamental changes in the nature and function of laws and legal institutions in modern society. New attitudes, new conditions and new demands press on the lawyer, the law-maker and the law-teacher from all sides. The demands for change, reform or even 'transformation' come from many disparate and ideologically differing quarters; the solutions proposed are varied, often fragmentary and inconsistent. There are demands that substantive and even 'popular' justice replace, or at least modify, 'technical' and 'procedural' justice, that the elevation of 'private' rights and 'private' interests give way to social planning, public welfare and concern for non-individual matters such as town planning, preservation of the environment, and protective or affirmative discrimination in favour of the disadvantaged. Even now, there are widespread demands for the further extension of abstract formal and individual rights—against the state and its agencies, against the family and the school.

The processes and aims of law-making are increasingly the subject of debate and attack. This volume presents some distinguished contributions to that debate; and its focus allows clear and practical consideration of the implications of law-making in one society and its culture and heritage.
