COVER
David Walker offers a visual study of Hagia Sophia, defining illusory plastic space before further developing historical literary and visual insights. See pp. 145–176.

leader	107	Generational reappraisal criticism	108	Building Calculated Uncertainty: Cedric Price's Interaction Centre Marcela Aragüez unfolds Cedric Price's notion of Calculated Uncertainty through a meticulous analysis of Price's Interaction Centre, revealing inherent tensions between his discursive production and built output. theory	125	Making space for degenerate thinking: revaluating architecture with Friedrich Nietzsche Simon Weir and Glen Hill examine how the experience of extraordinarily hyperperceptive individuals could provide insight into the qualities necessary for the philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche's 'Architecture for the Perceptive'.
history	133	Mechanistic plan and urban mass: two contexts of efficient wedding halls in Turkey Emre Altürk re-thinks the layout of Turkey's wedding halls from the mid-twentieth century, showing how architects deployed modernist spatial optimisation techniques to attain efficiency in the face of a rapidly growing urban population.
	145	The illusory plastic space of Hagia Sophia David Walker offers an examination of the intrinsic visual-spatial characteristics of Hagia Sophia, the nave as optical space, the antiphonal spaces created by double structure, and phases of illusory plastic space.
urbanism	177	Urban cloverleaves: origin, aesthetics, and contradictions of the Slussen, Stockholm Álvaro Clua Uceda analyses the urban cloverleaf interchange, with reference to the Slussen in Stockholm, designed by Tage William-Olsson and Gösta Lundborg, 1929–35.
reviews	191	Drawing Parallels Konstantinos Avramidis
	194	Superstudio Migrazioni Aleks Catina
