

Chicago

New in Paper,
Spring 1983

THE RHETORIC OF FICTION

Second Edition

Wayne C. Booth

This new edition features an extensive Afterword in which Booth discusses important developments in rhetorical criticism during the past twenty years. A new bibliography covering those years, and a supplementary index to both bibliographies provide a unique resource both for newcomers to fiction studies and for those who have known and used this classic work over the years.

$9.95 572 pages

THE REALISTIC IMAGINATION

ENGLISH FICTION
FROM FRANKENSTEIN
TO LADY CHATTERLEY

George Levine

"This is an astonishing piece of writing. The scholarship is dazzling, the insights provocative and original."—William K. Buckley, Studies in the Novel

$10.95 368 pages

ON THE MARGINS OF DISCOURSE

THE RELATION OF
LITERATURE TO LANGUAGE

Barbara Herrnstein Smith

"No other current theoretician of literature has bothered to explain so wittily, so accessibly, or so clearly why we care . . . about the twin fates of language and literature, and why their study . . . may legitimately be called one of the liberal—that is, liberating, arts."—Frank McConnell, Chronicle Review

$7.50 244 pages

SENTENCES

Howard Nemerov

"Nemerov [has] continued to accommodate himself to the literary tradition without falling back on parody . . . No one since Frost has done as much to move blank verse forward from where Wordsworth and Coleridge had left it."—Mary Kinzie, Poetry

$4.95 96 pages

Also available:

THE COLLECTED
POEMS OF HOWARD NEMEROV

$12.50 534 pages

DISSEMINATION

Jacques Derrida

Translated, with an Introduction and Additional Notes, by Barbara Johnson

"Derrida . . . [weaves] a complex pattern of puns, verbal echoes and allusions, intended to 'deconstruct' both the pretension of criticism to tell the truth about literature, and the pretension of philosophy to be the literature of truth."

—Peter Dews, New Statesman

$9.95 400 pages

THE POLITICS OF INTERPRETATION

Revised Edition, with a new Introduction
Edited by W. J. T. Mitchell

This volume explores the proposition that criticism and interpretation have a deep and complex relation with politics. Originally published in several issues of Critical Inquiry, these essays dramatize Orwell's assertion that "in our age there is no such thing as 'keeping out of politics.'"

$10.00 (est.) 400 pages (est.)

All titles listed are also available in cloth.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS

5801 South Ellis Avenue Chicago, IL 60637

THE LETTERS OF MARGARET FULLER

Volume I: 1817-1838 Volume II: 1839-1841

Edited by ROBERT N. HUDSPETH. Margaret Fuller (1810-1850)—pioneering feminist, Transcendentalist, critic, journalist, revolutionary—was one of the most influential women in the American literary circles of her day. Her letters—of which nearly a thousand have survived—constitute an autobiography of her intellectual and emotional life. These two volumes are the first in a major new series that, when completed, will make available all of the extant letters.

The first letters in Volume I are those of a seven-year-old child; the last were written by an uncommonly well-educated woman. They tell the story of her work with Amos Bronson Alcott and his experimental Temple School, of the early days of her friendship with Ralph Waldo Emerson, of the beginnings of her life as a writer, and of her important work as translator and critic of Goethe. The second volume publishes all of Margaret Fuller's letters written from 1839 to 1841 and are addressed to such eminent figures as Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry David Thoreau, William H. Channing, Elizabeth Peabody, and Frederic H. Hedge as well as to Fuller's family and intimate friends. These letters record the years of her involvement with the Transcendentalist Club and the founding of the Club's magazine, The Dial.

Robert N. Hudspeth has made every effort to publish the letters exactly as Fuller wrote them, reconstructing the texts, whenever possible, from Fuller's manuscripts. Using her journals and the manuscript letters of correspondents, Hudspeth has scrupulously annotated each letter with both notes on the texts and notes identifying the people, events, and books mentioned by Fuller.

"The publication of Fuller's letters will force us to reconsider Fuller's own life, thought, and writings, for they present the most complete and best picture of her available. A masterful edition."—Joel Myerson, University of South Carolina, Columbia.

From the letters—

"As to transcendentalism and the nonsense which is talked by so many about it—I do not know what is meant. For myself I should say that if it is meant that I have an active mind frequently busy with large topics, I hope it is so—if it is meant that I am honored by the friendship of such men as Mr. Emerson, Mr. Ripley, or Mr. Alcott, I hope it is so—but if it is meant that I cherish any opinions which interfere with domestic duties, cheerful courage and judgment in the practical affairs of life, I challenge any or all in the little world which knows me to prove such deficiency from any acts of mine since I came to woman's estate."

—From a letter to Caroline Sturgis, 16 November 1837

"A perfectly free organ is to be offered for the expression of individual thought and character. There are no party measures to be carried, no particular standard to be set up. A fair calm tone, a recognition of universal principles will, I hope pervade the essays in every form. I hope there will neither be a spirit of dogmatism nor of compromise. That this periodical will not aim at leading public opinion, but at stimulating each man to think for himself, to think more deeply and more nobly by letting them see how some minds are kept alive by a wise self-trust."

—On founding The Dial from a letter to William H. Channing, 22 March 1840

CORNELL $25.00 for each volume.
UNIVERSITY PRESS
P.O. Box 250, Ithaca, New York 14850

