APSA Awards and Recipients

(Editor's Note: As the announcement of APSA awards for 1982 at the Annual Meeting approaches, some political scientists will predictably begin to ask such questions as, "Who won the Leo Strauss award in 1977?" and some aficionados will know the answer. For those less on top of such Association history, here is a chance to bone up.)

Carey McWilliams Award

In addition to activating the Hubert H. Humphrey award and to renaming the Ethnic and Cultural Pluralism award (now the Ralph J. Bunche award), the Council has established the Carey McWilliams award. This prize is to recognize a journalist who has made a substantial contribution to the public understanding of politics. This year's selection committee, composed of Irving Louis Horowitz (chair), Norman Ornstein, and E. J. Dionne, have established the following criteria for selecting the recipient of the first Carey McWilliams award:

First, the individual chosen should have a distinguished public service career in newspaper, magazine or broadcast media.

Second, the individual chosen should, in his or her work, illumine some broad general principles of the social and political sciences.

Third, the individual chosen may have a background in editorial activities and not necessarily be a working journalist or writer.

Fourth, the individual chosen should illumine certain key elements identified with McWilliams: intellectual forthrightness and political independence.

Fifth, the individual chosen should be alive and able to enjoy the fruits of the award.

Recipients of APSA awards will be announced on Thursday evening, September 2, at the first plenary session of the Annual Meeting in Denver.
