

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

SANDRA AGUIAR received her M.A. in ISCTE Business School, Lisbon, Portugal. Her research focuses on foreign direct investment in Brazil and she has published a book on that subject. Professionally, she is an accountant and economist. Currently, she is the head of the financial department of Indaqua, S.A.

LUÍS AGUIAR-CONRARIA received his doctorate in economics from Cornell University in 2005. He is a researcher at NIPE (Economic Policies Research Unit) of the University of Minho, Portugal. His research is devoted to three different topics: business cycles, political economy, and time series analysis. His work has been published in journals such as the Journal of Money, Credit, and Banking; Macroeconomic Dynamics; Public Choice; and Electoral Studies, among others.

ROBERT ANDOLINA is associate professor of international studies at Seattle University. He is coauthor of Indigenous Development in the Andes: Culture, Power, and Transnationalism (2009). He has also published in Political Geography, Journal of Latin American Studies, Antipode, and Signs. His research focuses on development, ethnicity, and indigenous movements in Ecuador and Bolivia.

MARIA JOSÉ APARICIO MEZA es docente investigadora en la Facultad de Ciencias Agrarias de la Universidad Nacional de Asunción, en la carrera de ingeniería en ecología humana. Es profesora adjunta de gestión ambiental y metodología de la investigación, e imparte materias en el ámbito social y ambiental. Está realizando su tesis doctoral en sociología en la Universidad Complutense de Madrid sobre ecología humana y desarrollo rural en Paraguay, con un enfoque de territorio.

CLOTILDE BENÍTEZ is currently the director of the Carrera de Ecología Humana program at the Universidad Nacional de Asunción, Paraguay. Her research interests include family and youth rural-to-urban migration, international migration by families, rural youth and their families, and food security in rural areas.

ESTELA FATIMA CANDIA ROMERO es ingeniero agrónomo, con un título de M.A. en sociología rural de la Universidad de Guelph, Canada. Actualmente es profesora titular de las asignaturas de Introducción a la Sociología y Diagnóstico de Comunidades en la carrera de ecología humana de la Facultad de Ciencias Agrarias de la Universidad Nacional de Asunción, Paraguay. Las áreas de interés de investigación comprenden estudios de la mujer y su rol en las familias, las organizaciones rurales como base del desarrollo comunitario.

CHRISTOPHER DARNTON is an assistant professor of politics at the Catholic University of America. He received his Ph.D. in politics in 2009 from Princeton University. His research concerns conflict resolution, the domestic politics of foreign policy making, and Latin American international relations. His work has appeared in Security Studies, and he is completing a book manuscript on rivalry and rapprochement in Cold War Latin America.

ÁLVARO FERNÁNDEZ BRAVO is director of New York University, Buenos Aires, and researcher at Consejo Nacional de Investigaciones Científicas y Técnicas and Universidad de San Andrés, Argentina. He received his licenciatura en letras at Universidad de Buenos Aires and his Ph.D. at Princeton University. He has taught in several Argentine and American universities and has published several books and articles on Latin American literature, cultural patrimonies, intellectual networks, and critical theory. He is the author of Literatura y frontera (1999); editor of La invención de la nación (2000); and coeditor of Sujetos en tránsito (2003), El valor de la cultura (2007), and Episodios en la formación de las redes culturales en América Latina (2010).

ELIZABETH FINNIS earned her Ph.D. at McMaster University in 2006 and is currently an associate professor in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology, University of Guelph. Her research interests include rural agricultural livelihoods, agricultural decision making, and dietary and agricultural transitions in smallholder farming households in Paraguay and India. Her research has been published in journals including American Anthropologist; Agriculture and Human Values; Food, Culture, and Society; and Anthropologica.

ROBERT GAY is professor and chair of sociology at Connecticut College. He is the author of Popular Organization and Democracy in Rio de Janeiro: A Tale of Two Favelas (1994), and Lucia: Testimonies of a Brazilian Drug Dealer's Woman (2005). He is currently working on a book on the Comando Vermelho and organized crime in Rio de Janeiro.

MOHAMED AZZIM GULAMHUSSEN is associate professor of international financial management at Instituto Superior de Ciências do Trabalho e da Empresa (ISCTE-IUL), where he is also the director of doctoral programs of the Business School and the Business Research Unit (UNIDE). His work has been published in the Journal of Multinational Financial Management, Applied Financial Economics, International Business Review, Management International Review, and Thunderbird International Business Review. His paper with Mark Casson and Ken Dark received the Emerald Excellence Award for the top fifty papers published in 2009.

LIRIO GUTIÉRREZ RIVERA studied political science (Dr. Phil, Freie Universität Berlin) and anthropology (magister, Universidad de los Andes, Colombia). Her research topics include security policies, violence, marginal groups, and youths. She has conducted research in Honduras and Colombia. Currently, she is a post-doctoral researcher at desiguALdades.net Research Network (Freie Universität Berlin and Iberoamerikanisches Institut), where she is studying elite formation and migrant entrepreneurship in Latin America, focusing on the cases of Arab entrepreneurs.

MAIAH JASKOSKI is an assistant professor of national security affairs at the Naval Postgraduate School. Her research has been published in Latin American Politics and Society and Armed Forces and Society. Her forthcoming book with the Johns Hopkins University Press analyzes military politics and democracy in the Andes. Jaskoski received her Ph.D. in political science from the University of California, Berkeley.

RENATA KELLER is an assistant professor in the Department of International Relations at Boston University. Her work examines the motivations behind Mexico's defense of Fidel Castro in the decade after the Cuban Revolution. She received bachelor's degrees in history and Spanish from Arizona State University (2004) and a master's and doctorate in history from the University of Texas (2009, 2012).

PEDRO C. MAGALHÃES received his doctorate in political science from the Ohio State University in 2003 and is a researcher at the Institute of Social Sciences of the University of Lisbon, Portugal. His research focuses on public opinion, electoral behavior, institutional design in democratic regimes, and the political role of the judiciary. His work has appeared in journals such as Comparative Politics, Electoral Studies, Public Choice, International Journal of Public Opinion Research, and others.

EDUARDO MARQUES is Livre-Docente Professor in the Department of Political Science of the University of São Paulo and researcher of the Center for Metropolitan Studies. He is author of articles and books on public policies, urban stratification, and poverty and social segregation in Brazilian metropolises, including recently Redes sociais, segregação e pobreza (2010) and Políticas públicas no Brasil (2007, with Gilberto Hochman and Marta Arretche).

STEPHEN D. MORRIS is professor and chair of the Department of Political Science at Middle Tennessee State University. He is the author of Corruption and Politics in Contemporary Mexico (1991), Political Reformism in Mexico (1995), Gringolandia: Mexican Identity and Perceptions of the United States (2005), and Political Corruption in Mexico: The Impact of Democratization (2009); and coeditor of Corruption and Democracy in Latin America (2009) and Corruption and Politics in Latin America: National and Regional Dynamics (2010). His articles have appeared in Bulletin of Latin American Research, Comparative Political Studies, Journal of Latin American Studies, and Third World Quarterly, among other journals.

NAZIH RICHANI is associate professor and director of Latin American studies at Kean University, New Jersey. He is the author of two books: Dilemmas of Democracy and Political Parties in Sectarian Societies: The Case of the PSP in Lebanon (1997), and Systems of Violence: The Political Economy of War and Peace in Colombia (2002). He is also author of numerous articles, including those published in Latin American Politics and Society, Journal of Conflict Studies, and Civil Wars. Currently, he is working on two book-length manuscripts, one on state making in Colombia since the late eighteenth century and the other on criminal violence in Latin America.

GERD SCHÖNWÄLDER is the director of the Policy and Planning Group at the International Development Research Centre (IDRC), Ottawa. Before joining IDRC, he was the deputy director of the Canadian Foundation for the Americas, an Ottawa-based think tank on Western Hemispheric issues. He previously spent several years in Brussels as a European Union official. Schönwälder holds a doctorate in political science from McGill University and has written on local government, social movements, and public insecurity. He is currently interested in democratization, citizen participation, and questions of how globalization is linked to violent conflict. His latest book, coedited with Francisco Gutiérrez, is entitled Economic Liberalization and Political Violence: Utopia or Dystopia? (2010).

JOSEPH S. TULCHIN is a former associate editor and editor of LARR. He taught for twenty-five years, first at Yale University and then at University of North Carolina, before moving to Washington, DC, to direct the Latin American Program of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars until 2006. He recently accepted a position with Geopolitical Information Service, a European-based website that provides subscribers with analyses of world affairs. He is an associate of the David Rockefeller Center for Latin American Studies of Harvard University.