

Notes on the Contributors

Martin W. Bauer studied psychology and history in Switzerland. He was research fellow at the Science Museum in London and is currently reader in social psychology and research methodology at the London School of Economics. His work deals with resistance in social processes, public opinion, public attitudes and social influence, as well as a comparative study of the public understanding of science and technology. He has edited several books, among them Resistance to New Technology (Cambridge, 1995), Biotechnology: The Making of a Global Controversy (with G. Gaskell, Cambridge, 2002), Genomics & Society (with G. Gaskell, Earthscan, 2006). He has also had several articles published in international journals. Address: Institute of Social Psychology & Methodology, London School of Economics, Houghton Street, London WC2A 2AE, UK. [email: M.Bauer@lse.ac.uk]

Pablo Briñol is professor of social psychology at the Universidad Autónoma de Madrid where he obtained his doctorate degree in 1999. His research deals with the psychological mechanisms that allow us to form, modify and maintain attitudes. These persuasive processes range from the most elementary automatic effects to the most complex metacognitive processes. Over the last decade he has published 3 books and more than 70 articles and book chapters, which have appeared in the principal specialist journals. His work has also caught the attention of the non-specialist press and has been taken up by Science, The New York Times and Psychology Today. Address: Carretera de Colmenar, Km 15.500, Campus de Cantoblanco (Fac. Psicología), Universidad Autónoma de Madrid, 28049 Madrid, Spain. [email: pablo.brinnol@uam.es]

Jorge Correia Jesuino holds a doctorate in sociology from the Technical University in Lisbon and is emeritus professor of the Lisbon Higher Institute for the Sciences of Work and Companies (ISCTE). He has published many studies on topics related to workplace representation and social and organizational psychology, as well as interdisciplinary and epistemological essays. [email: argos@netcabo.pt]

Maria Emery is ingénieur d'études hors classe at the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique (CNRS), Paris. Address: Institut International de Philosophie, 8 rue Jean-Calvin, 75005 Paris, France. [email: INST.INTER.N.PHILO@wanadoo.fr]

Copyright © UNESCO 2008

SAGE: Los Angeles, London, New Delhi and Singapore, <http://dio.sagepub.com>
DOI: 10.1177/0392192107087925

Hélène Joffe a social and health psychologist in the psychology department at University College London, has published a number of studies on the emotional and symbolic aspects of reactions to risk and is the author of Risk and 'the Other' (Cambridge, 1999). Among her more recent works are the articles 'The Centrality of the Self-Control Ethos in Western Aspersions Regarding Outgroups: A Social Representational Analysis of Stereotype Content' (with C. Staerke, Culture & Psychology, 2007) and 'The "Hospital Superbug": Social Representations of MRSA' (with P. Washer, Social Science & Medicine, 2006). Address: University College London, Gower Street, London WC1E 6BT, UK. [email: h.joffe@ucl.ac.uk]

Stéphane Laurens professor in social psychology, is a member of the Centre for Research in Psychology, Communication and Cognition (CRPCC) at the University of Rennes-2. Relying on experimental research, case studies or analysis of historical documents, he draws a panorama of theories of social influence and the real and imaginary facts they are based on. Using recent meanings of social influence (persuasion, manipulation, conformism) or older ones (suggestion, hypnosis, somnambulism, magnetism, possession . . .), he shows that in the context of influence facts are obscured by a fantastical conception of the influence relationship which, though unfounded, supplies both common sense and scientists with an image of influence that justifies irrational fears. His recent research also concerns the nature of subjects in their relationship with others. [email: stephane.laurens@uhb.fr]

Li Liu professor of social psychology at Beijing Normal University and concurrent professor in the Beijing Municipal Key Laboratory for Applied Experimental Psychology, is a member of the Chinese Society for Social Psychology. He holds a doctorate in social psychology from the London School of Economics. His recent work is concerned with social markers associated with the HIV virus, changes in attitude, trust and quality of life, based on a perspective of dialogue and Chinese indigenous psychology. Among his recent publications are 'Sensitizing Concept, Themata and Sharedness: A Dialogical Perspective of Social Representations' and 'Quality of Life as a Social Representation in China'. Address: School of Psychology, Beijing Normal University, Beijing 100875, China. [email: l.liu@bnu.edu.cn]

Ivana Marková who was born in Czechoslovakia, has been living in the UK since 1967 and is professor of psychology at Stirling University. Her research deals mainly with the theory of social knowledge, social representations, language, communication and their role in different social practices, especially those connected with medical practices and politics. She is a fellow of The British Psychological Society, The Edinburgh Royal Society and The British Academy. [email: ivana.markova@stir.ac.uk]

Clélia Maria Nascimento-Schulze holds a masters degree in psychology from the Pontifícia Universidade Católica in São Paulo, Brazil, and a doctorate in social psychology from Bristol University. She is a lecturer at the Federal University of Santa Catarina and a researcher for the Conselho Nacional de Pesquisa (CNPQ) and Brazil's Carlos Chagas Foundation. She works chiefly on applied programmes of informal education in science and the popularization of science, as well as social representations of science, technology and basic scientific education. [email: cleli@matrix.com.br]

Richard E. Petty took a bachelor's degree at the University of Virginia and a doctorate in social psychology at Ohio State University, where he is currently Distinguished University Professor of psychology. His research is concerned with social influence and persuasion and is focused on the underlying processes of decision making and changes in attitudes and behaviour. He is the author of eight books and more than 250 articles and book chapters. The former editor of the Personality and Social Psychology Bulletin, he has received research awards from the Society for Personality and Social Psychology and the Society for Consumer Psychology. Address: Department of Psychology, Ohio State University, 1835 Neil Avenue Mall, Columbus, OH 43210-1222, USA. [email: petty.1@osu.edu]

Margarita Sánchez-Mazas who graduated in history (1978) and took a doctorate in psychology (1994) at the University of Geneva (Switzerland), is a lecturer in general and social psychology at Brussels Free University, Belgium. Her research areas are: the psychosocial determinants of negative intergroup attitudes (xenophobia); processes of identification and social influence; social representations of citizenship and alterity; gender relationships; and harassment. She has taught in secondary schools and for many years in adult education in both Belgium and Switzerland (Haute Ecole de Travail Social de Genève). Address: Institut de Sociologie, Université Libre de Bruxelles, CP 124, 44 Avenue Jeanne, 1050 Bruxelles, Belgium. [email: masanche@ulb.ac.be]

Luca Maria Scarantino jointly with Maurice Aymard, is the current editor of Diogenes. With a PhD in philosophy and social sciences from the EHESS, he has developed a conception of philosophy as the epistemic constitution of certain concepts of the social sciences, such as violence, persuasion or ressentiment. He is a member of the Steering Committee of the International Federation of Philosophical Societies (FISP) and Deputy Secretary-General of the International Council for Philosophy and Humanistic Studies. [URL: <http://www.unesco.org/cipsh/scaranti/>]