
About the Authors

Lisa C. Bower teaches in the political science department at Arizona State University. She is currently completing two books, Trans(Forming) the Legal Field: Feminist Theories, Legal Feminism(s) and Law, which addresses questions related to transformation in feminism and law, and Law, Culture and the Politics of "Direct Address," which explores the relationship among and between law, culture, and social change.

Wendy Espeland is Assistant Professor of Sociology at Northwestern University. She is currently writing a book about how competing conceptions of rationality and differing views on how to measure and represent value influence the political process surrounding environmental decisionmaking. Her research interests include organizational culture, environmental politics, and the construction of political, legal and professional identities.

Carole Goldberg-Ambrose is Professor of Law at UCLA, where she is also affiliated with the American Indian Studies Center. She co-edited and co-authored the 1982 edition of Felix Cohen's Handbook of Federal Indian Law. Her research interests include tribal legal systems and legal pluralism.

Susan Staiger Gooding is a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Chicago in the Committee on Ideas and Methods and holds the M.T.S. degree from Harvard Divinity School. In addition to her ongoing research on current fishing rights litigation by the Colville Confederated Tribes, she has published and presented work on legal and cultural discourses in Native America. Her concern to identify the limits on and possibilities of legal language for recognize local, group, and transnational identities also frames her research in the area of reproductive rights.

Carol J. Greenhouse is Professor of Anthropology at Indiana University–Bloomington. Her publications on the ethnography of law include Praying for Justice, Law and Community in Three American Towns (with Barbara Yngvesson and David Engel), and A Moment's Notice (forthcoming).

Mindie Lazarus-Black is Assistant Professor of Criminal Justice and Affiliate Assistant Professor of Anthropology at the University of Illinois at Chicago. Her scholarship focuses on the history and ethnography of class, kinship, gender, and the law in the English-speaking Caribbean. She is the author of Legitimate Acts and Illegal

Encounters (Smithsonian Institution Press, 1994) and recipient of a National Endowment for the Humanities Fellowship for College Teachers that enabled her to develop a longitudinal study of the consequences of radically altering a nation's kinship codes.

Noga Morag Levine is a doctoral candidate in the Jurisprudence and Social Policy Program at the University of California at Berkeley Boalt Hall School of Law and is a graduate of the Hebrew University Faculty of Law. Her primary research interests are in comparative law, environmental policy, and the relationship between differing conceptions of state authority and regulatory cultures.

Elizabeth Mertz is a Research Fellow at the American Bar Foundation and an Assistant Professor at Northwestern University School of Law. Her research focuses on the intersection of language, law, and social identity. She is co-editor of Law and Social Inquiry and co-edited (with Richard Parmentier) a volume entitled Semiotic Mediation. She is currently completing a project on the language of law school education funded by the Spencer Foundation and the American Bar Foundation.

Charles Zerner is Program Director for the Natural Resources and Rights Program of the Rainforest Alliance, New York City, an international environmental program concerned with the local social consequences and legal implications of global environmental problems and programs. Trained in law and in architecture, Zerner has conducted ethnographic research on environmental and socio-legal issues among fishing and farming communities in South Sulawesi, the Maluku Islands, Java (Indonesia). He has worked as a legal and policy analyst on the status of indigenous communities' rights and livelihoods for the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank, and the Asian Development Bank. He is currently editing a volume of essays, Forests, Coasts, and Seas: Culture and the Question of Rights to Southeast Asian Environments. His Asian research analyzes the production of environmental discourses about customary law and community, focusing on interrelationships among transnational, national, and local sources of metaphor, law, and narrative.