

RESEARCH COMMITTEE

Guidelines for Research Projects sponsored by the College

Any member of the College may approach the Research Committee with an outline project he or she believes would be suitable as a College Sponsored Project. In making such an approach the member should bear in mind that the College does not have research funds available for distribution and it does not sponsor projects which would be better done by Universities or Research Units. College Sponsored Projects are usually either concerned with a national question (e.g. manpower, practice, resources) or need access to the wide membership of the College or both.

If the Research Committee agrees to sponsor a proposed project, the proposer will be asked to join or form a working party set up by the Committee especially for that project. The Chairman and Secretary of the Research Committee are ex-officio members of all such working parties. The working party will be expected to design the project, find the necessary resources and steer the whole scheme to its conclusion, whilst reporting regularly to the parent Committee about progress.

Any publication that may result from such a College Sponsored Project should make it clear that the project was indeed sponsored by the Royal College of Psychiatrists and the research workers should give their address as that of the College in London. However, the authors of the work should be named in the usual way, and they would be expected to take personal responsibility for the content of the publication, as it will not be vetted in any way by the Research Committee or other official College body.

Acknowledgement should normally be given to named College officials and staff. A statement along the following lines may be appropriate: 'This project was sponsored by the Research Committee of the Royal College of Psychiatrists. The methods, results and conclusions are the responsibility of the authors alone.'
