REPORTS AND PAMPHLETS

A Study of Day Centres by Anne Stephens and Pauline Nattress. Published by MIND, 1978 (pp 65, £1.50).

This report is a description of the work of seven Day Centres in England and Wales. It has been written by two students on the University of Surrey's course for a postgraduate diploma in applied social studies. Part of that course included a full time placement with MIND from December 1976 to March 1977. Those three or four months 'provided enough time . . . for suitable centres to be chosen, lists of basic questions to be drawn up, the necessary visits and interviews to take place and the writing and checking of details to be completed.' One admires such a high work-rate.

The seven Day Centres are inevitably observed too briefly to yield more than a superficial impression, but they have been charitably treated and interestingly described by the authors. The Centres varied widely in all sorts of ways—in size, in premises, in affiliation, in funding, in clientèle, in staff ratio, in management, in sophistication, etc—but common to all was the inclusion of some mentally ill or mentally handicapped people among those who attended, and the fact that each Centre placed some emphasis on retraining and resettling into work.

The authors use the term 'members' to cover 'all the client groups attending the Day Centres' and hope to imply by that term 'an active participation rather than being a passive recipient of help'. They
