Peter Lee (England); Morris Mendelson (USA); Barthélémy Mercadal (France); Paulo Fernandes de Sá (Brazil); Misao Tatsuta (Japan).

Aims and Scope

The Journal is a mechanism for the exchange of ideas and information about practices and theories of the structure, operation and regulation of the processes of capital formation and the capital markets throughout the world.

The major theme of the Journal is the interdisciplinary (that is, law, economics, corporate finance) and comparative approach to a subject of burgeoning interest, namely the internationalization of the securities markets.

Legal perspective is supplied by academicians, practitioners and government officials. Specialists in corporate finance and economics supply critical background. The practices of various national systems are described in detail and compared with one another.

ORDER NOW—TWO NEW BOOKS

STUDIES IN INTERNATIONAL LAW (2nd ed. 1977) covers a wide range of subjects in six areas of transnational law: general aspects of international law; the U.S. and international law; the Arab-Israeli conflict; European Community law; comparative law; and practicing transnational law. In particular, studies are of European Community antitrust, labor and trade law; international tax; the act of state doctrine and the defense of sovereign immunity in international litigation among others.

"It is good news that Professor Stuart S. Malawer's studies on transnational legal problems are coming out in a new edition, one that will be enriched by the inclusion of additional contributions from the pen of this versatile and meticulous scholar."

Covey T. Oliver, Hubbell Professor of Law, University of Pennsylvania.

IMPOSED TREATIES AND INTERNATIONAL LAW (1977) analyzes the juridical development of a new rule of customary international law regulating the use of force in the treaty-making process in the context of existing international society and as a means of managing interstate conflict. It utilizes a positivistic approach to review doctrine, state practice, international legislation, and jurisprudence.

"Malawer has engaged in wide-ranging research of an historical, comparative character. He raises the pertinent questions and comments perceptively about ideas or provisions that he is describing. His book struck me as the work of a careful, thoughtful, conscientious legal scholar."

Henry J. Steiner, Professor of Law, Harvard Law School.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Malawer has studied law, politics and international business in the United States and abroad; he has earned graduate degrees at the Cornell Law School and the University of Pennsylvania and has done graduate law studies at Harvard, Oxford and the Hague Academy. He has both practiced and taught in the U.S. and abroad and is a Senior Fellow of the Institute for International & Foreign Trade Law, Georgetown University Law Center.
