MEDITERRANEAN ARCHAEOLOGY

AUSTRALIAN AND NEW ZEALAND JOURNAL FOR THE ARCHAEOLOGY OF THE MEDITERRANEAN WORLD

For over fifty years, scholars from Australia and New Zealand have played an important role in the archaeological exploration of the Mediterranean region. Until recently, information about their research and discoveries in the field has appeared scattered in various journals, published overseas.

Mediterranean Archaeology now provides easy and direct access to their most recent findings, featuring regular reports on the major expeditions and excavations carried out in the Mediterranean area by scholars from Australasia, such as

- the Australian Cyprus Expedition;
- the Australian excavations at I Fani in South Italy;
- the University of Sydney's Pella excavations in Jordan;
- the excavations at Tell Nebi Mend in Syria, carried out by teams from the University of Melbourne and the University of London's Institute of Archaeology;
- the excavations conducted at Torone in Greece by the Athens Archaeological Society in collaboration with the Australian Archaeological Institute at Athens.

The journal is also the main medium for the publication of relevant material held in collections and museums in both Australia and New Zealand, including

- the Abbey Museum in Caboolture, Queensland;
- the Antiquities Museum at the University of Queensland, Brisbane;
- the John Elliott Classics Museum at the University of Tasmania, Hobart;
- the Nicholson Museum at the University of Sydney.

Mediterranean Archaeology is published annually. It responds to the need for an international journal of high quality that treats this area as an entity. Open to contributors from any country it will publish papers in English, French, German, and Italian.

Recent articles include:

- Original Elements and Mediterranean Stimuli in Iberian Pottery (Ricardo Olmos, in vols. 2 & 3);
- Some Alexander Coinages of Seleucus I with Anchors (A. Houghton, in vol. 4);
- The Origin of the Celtiberians (Burillo Mozota, in vol. 4);
- The Hellenization of Pisidia (S. Mitchell, in vol. 4);
- Twenty Years of Archaeological Research on the Aeolian Islands (M. Cavalier, in vol. 5/6)

A.D. Trendall, The Red-Figured Vases of Lucania, Campania and Sicily 1 (Oxford 1967) 193-4, or 1.193-4.

Authors' initials should be stated, at least at their first mention.
