

Rethinking Language, Mind, and Meaning

Scott Soames

“This is a very significant and original contribution to the philosophy of language, centering on a new way of thinking about propositions. Previous authors have treated propositions as abstract entities that speakers and hearers are aware of and that constitute the meanings or contents of sentences. But Soames argues persuasively that propositions are best thought of as things people do.”

Erasmus, Man of Letters

The Construction of Charisma in Print

Lisa Jardine

With a new preface by the author

“Erasmus, Man of Letters may inspire skepticism about Erasmus’s alleged sincerity, but it is hard not to feel increased admiration for the energy and ingenuity with which the indefatigable scholar continued to combine so successful a publicity campaign with his countless other literary activities.”

The Praise of Folly

Desiderius Erasmus

With a new foreword by Anthony Grafton

“There is no more joyous and delightful bit of forensic jugglery than Desiderius Erasmus’s The Praise of Folly and a debt of gratitude is owed Professor Hoyt Hopewell Hudson for translating the old Latin of 1511 into lively, vivid, contemporary English, at once lucid and free. . . . Like all great minds Erasmus has the faculty of being perennially contemporary, and The Praise of Folly is a gay, witty revelation of the subtleties and intricacies of the scholarly mind of the Renaissance.”
