Latin America comes in for very special attention as we analyze the outcome of the bishops conference in Puebla, Mexico—and of Pope John Paul's attempt to redefine the Church's social mission.... Also a report from an Argentinian, necessarily anonymous, who examines the grisly facts about human rights in Argentina today.... And THEODORE JACQUENEY puts probing questions to Brazilians about the future of democratic values there.... Still south of the border, a short story by RICHARD O'MARA about people searching for safe haven in a cruel world.... Back to Boston for another series of popular vignettes by THOMAS COTTLE, this time on elderly urban Jews trying to sort out the meaning of Jewishness and "success".... CHARLES G. ROBERTSON, JR., takes a long hard look at the Soviet bloc as now viewed through the lens of John Paul's Vatican.... JEREMIAH NOVAK takes readers on an illuminating global survey, proving that, at least in the international economy, the U.S. is no longer "Number One".... JAMES NUECHTERLEIN explores the failure of American historians to treat the religious factor adequately, and what can be done about that.... RICHARD JOHN NEUHAUS explains why Wolfhart Pannenberg thinks America may be "elected" to a special role in world history, and why that is a humbling prospect for thoughtful patriots....and much, much more. Clearly now is the time to grace your friends with a gift subscription to WORLDVIEW.
