The Wellcome Trust originally fed my appetite for the history of medicine. F. E. James generously shared his knowledge of Laycock with me. Colleagues in Edinburgh University Library provided a conducive environment for conducting this research. Joy Pitman, former Archivist to the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh, helped considerably by cataloguing the Laycock papers held there. Katherine Webb, York Health Trust Archivist, supplied me with invaluable information relating to Laycock's career in York. Jean Archibald and Christine Johnson helped me decipher some of the most crabbed handwriting in the original manuscript. Jim Marks helped me identify and date York press cuttings. Ian Goddard and Charles Melville assisted in the preparation of illustrations for the volume. Allan and Margaret Beveridge, Bill Bynum, José Closs, Roger Emerson, Chris Lawrence, Annette and Vincent Hope, Roy Porter, Caroline Tonson-Rye, Bill Zachs and two anonymous referees commented helpfully on various drafts. Mr Tony Chambers kindly allowed me to consult material relating to Robert Chambers. For permission to use material in their collections, I am grateful to the various institutions listed below and to the Wesleyan Historical Society Library, the York Medical Society Library, the Royal College of Surgeons of England Library, the Royal College of Physicians of London Library and the Guildhall Library. Finally I would like to thank Andrew Doig and my little Barfeet, David and Sophie, who never stopped asking embarrassing questions about "that Laycock book".
