

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

BLISS CARTWRIGHT is a Senior Analyst at Longbranch Research Associates, Inc. (LRA), Takoma Park, Maryland. LRA provides statistical analysis services primarily in civil litigation. He has investigated job assignment practices in a major railroad, hiring patterns in an international broadcasting agency, and pension benefits in the tire industry. He is currently studying allegations in a southern school system of discrimination in hiring by race.

SALLY EWING has a Ph.D. in Sociology from Princeton University and currently is an Honorary Fellow with the Russian Area Studies Program at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. She has written on Soviet law and social insurance and is now writing a series of essays on Soviet culture.

ERIKA S. FAIRCHILD is an Associate Professor of Political Science and Public Administration at North Carolina State University. Her recent research and publications have been chiefly in the field of comparative police administration and the politics of criminal justice. She is currently a visiting scholar at the Max Planck Institute for Comparative and International Criminal Law in Freiburg im Breisgau, Federal Republic of Germany.

LAWRENCE M. FRIEDMAN is the Marion Rice Kirkwood Professor of Law at Stanford University. A past president of the Law and Society Association, he is the author of A History of American Law (New York: Simon & Schuster, 2nd ed., 1985) and The Legal System: A Social Science Perspective (New York: Russell Sage, 1975).

ROBERT A. KAGAN is a Professor of Political Science at the University of California, Berkeley. He is the author of Regulatory Justice: Implementing a Wage Price Freeze (New York: Russell Sage, 1978), and the coauthor, with Eugene Bardach, of Going by the Book: The Problem of Regulatory Unreasonableness (Philadelphia: Temple University Press, 1982). He has also written articles on debt collection litigation, tax evasion, and corporate law practice. He is now working on a comparative study of law, social control and dispute resolution in Rotterdam and American seaports.

NEAL MILNER is a Professor of Political Science at the University of Hawaii. He has recently published articles on the emergence of rights, legal mobilization, mental health advocacy, and the ideology of mediation. He is currently studying mediation ideologies, the way organizations perceive and use law as part of their everyday activities, and the changes in the mental health rights movement since 1981. He is the Acting Director of the University of Hawaii's Program on Conflict Resolution.

CHARLES PHILLIPS is the author of Sentencing Councils in the Federal Courts (New York: Lexington Books, 1980) and coeditor, with Gordon P. Whitaker, of Evaluating Performance in Criminal Justice Agencies (New York: Sage, 1983). He has taught in the political science departments at the University of Texas at Austin and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He is currently pursuing an M.P.H. in the Department of Health Policy and Administration at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

STANTON WHEELER has returned to Yale Law School following a two-year leave of absence during which he served as President of the Amateur Athletic Foundation of Los Angeles. He is editing a series of volumes (with Kenneth Mann and Austin Sarat) on white collar crime for the Yale Press, the next one of which, Sitting in Judgment: The Sentencing of White Collar Offenders, will be out in 1988. He is also examining a variety of policy issues affecting the world of sports.