CURIOSITIES OF BRITISH ARCHAEOLOGY

by Ronald Jessup

price 25s.

227 pages

This book is not intended to encourage an archaeological itch nor does the author, in a phrase once used by Mr. John Betjeman in introducing an anthology, guarantee that the writers quoted are necessarily 'all right'. It is a personal selection from a wide variety of writings which relate in a broad sense to the history and progress of British archaeology. It is, in brief, a selective prospect of British antiquity.

In the items chosen, some telling degree of literary qualification has generally been applied: comments on some feature of the age, some nicety of manner, some strong contrast in a point of view, these too have influenced selection.

Advance readers say that this is a book for edification, entertainment, and real enjoyment for antiquary and general reader alike.

Ronald Jessup, a well-known Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, has written several books and many papers on various aspects of archaeology. His last book Puzzle of the Past was most warmly acclaimed in its English, American, and foreign editions.

TITUS BURCKHARDT

Siena—The City of the Virgin

Translated from the German by

MARGARET MCDONOUGH BROWN

Combining magnificent colour photographs and black and white illustrations with a commentary based on the most direct contemporary evidence and works of art, Dr Burckhardt vividly presents the city of Siena as the scene of some of the most important developments, in art, architecture, and civic life, of medieval and Renaissance Europe. 28 colour photographs, 16 pp. of monochrome illustrations, numerous line illustrations 50s net

The Local Scripts of Archaic Greece

A Study of the Origin of the Greek Alphabet and its Development from the Eighth to the Fifth Centuries B.C.

L. H. JEFFERY

The last comprehensive textbook on the inscriptions of Greece before 403 B.C. was published over 70 years ago. The accumulation of new material and the rapid progress of epigraphic study have long called for a new survey. This work attempts to construct, for Greek inscriptions from the eighth to fifth centuries, a chronological system (divided tentatively into twenty-five-year periods), like those already generally accepted for Greek sculpture and pottery.

The Sword in Anglo-Saxon England

Its Archaeology and Literature

H. R. ELLIS DAVIDSON

Illustrated by R. E. OAKESHOTT

The first part of this study is based mainly on material from the British Isles considered against the background of finds from Western Europe; in the second part information has been collected from Anglo-Saxon, Old Norse, and medieval Latin prose and poetry. 55s net

Aristeas of Proconnesus

J. D. P. BOLTON

In the mid-fifth century B.C. Herodotus was told the story of Aristeas the Greek, vanished long before into the Russian hinterland, apparently seeking a paradise 'beyond the North Wind'. On returning he had embodied his experiences in a poem. Later writers tell how his soul could travel over the face of the earth, leaving his body as if dead. The history of the notion of 'soul-journeys' in Greek and Latin literature is among the many topics treated in this study.

The Making of Domesday Book

V. H. GALBRAITH

The author examines anew the procedure of the Great Inquest of 1086 and the steps by which its findings were recorded in Domesday Book. The two volumes of Domesday Book, and the hitherto neglected Exon Domesday, which are considered, are not later copies but the actual originals—all written before the death of William the Conqueror. 2 plates 35s net

Andreas and the Fates of the Apostles

Edited, with Introduction, Commentary, and Glossary by KENNETH R. BROOKS

Andreas is one of the most interesting of old English poems. This edition makes use for the first time of the Latin versions of the legend published in 1930 by Blatt; The Fates of the Apostles by Cynewulf is also included, and the Introduction considers the question of Beowulfian influence on Andreas. 35s net
