War and Christianity Today

FRANZISKUS K. STRATMANN, O.P.

THIS is the most comprehensive and authoritative recent work on the subject by a Catholic. The author is well-known for his study The Church and War of thirty years ago. In candidly outlining and denouncing the frightful evils inherent in and associated with modern total war, Fr Stratmann is, along with Pius XII and a number of Cardinals and Bishops, upholding the honour of the Church. Of greatest interest to most readers, perhaps, will be Fr Stratmann's penetrating analysis, from the moral viewpoint, of a possible war between East and West. He firmly rejects the notion of a 'preventive' war, but he denies with equal vigour that a Christian in the West can ignore or callously overlook the fate of millions under Russian domination. Other matters discussed include the Church's responsibility for peace, the question of conscientious objection, the personal duty of peace, and the U.N. There is also a very valuable commentary on Pius XII's Christmas address of 1948. 12s.

An Introduction to the Spiritual Life

REGINALD BUCKLER, O.P.

Originally published as Spiritual Considerations, this book, by the well-known author of The Perfection of Man by Charity, presents a series of essays on various aspects of the spiritual life which we are confident will be as valuable to religious and to devout layfolk now as they were when first published some forty years ago. 11s.

The Meaning of Christian Perfection

J. AUMANN, O.P., AND D. L. GREENSTOCK, T.O.P.

The exchange of letters which comprise this book was occasioned by a review by Father Jordan Aumann of the book Be Ye Perfect written by Father David L. Greenstock and published in 1952. It is in fact a study of the basic notions and principles of the theology of Christian perfection. The authors each clarify their position with regard to the study of these problems and define the basic notion of Christian perfection in general; then they go on to discuss the vexing question of the division of that perfection into its component parts and grades. A most stimulating and unusual book. 12s. 6d.

A CATECHISM FOR ADULTS

At first sight there is something arid about a creed, but any Christian ignores a creed at his peril. It is all too easy to drift along on a tide of emotional devotion, and precisely because our devotion is not disciplined by the rule of faith, to become stagnant in the sands of sentiment. It is precisely with this danger in mind that Father Ian Hislop wrote these articles for adult and educated Christians. They first appeared in Blackfriars during 1955 and the interest they aroused has encouraged their publication in a more permanent form. 5s.
