

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

JOHN BRAITHWAITE is a Professorial Fellow in the Research School of Social Sciences, Australian National University, and a Visiting Fellow of the American Bar Foundation. He works on business regulation and criminal justice. Recent books are Not Just Deserts: A Republican Theory of Criminal Justice (1990, with Philip Pettit) and Responsive Regulation: Transcending the Deregulation Debate (forthcoming with Ian Ayres).

STEVEN ALAN CHILDRESS is Associate Professor of Law at Tulane University. He has written articles on appellate courts and First Amendment law, and is coauthor of a book on judicial review. His current research involves judicial review of constitutional cases.

DANIEL P. DOYLE is an Assistant Professor of Sociology at the University of Montana. His current research is focused on the circumstances under which disputes escalate into violence.

JOHN FLOOD is a Jean Monnet Fellow at the European University Institute in Florence and teaches at Anglia Business School. He has carried out research on both the English and the U.S. legal professions. He is currently researching the topics of internationalization of legal practice and international dispute resolution.

JULIE HORNEY is Associate Professor of Criminal Justice at the University of Nebraska at Omaha. She is the author of articles on legal impact, decisionmaking in the criminal justice system, and criminal careers. She is currently writing a book on rape law reform with Cassia Spohn.

DAVID F. LUCKENBILL is an Associate Professor of Sociology at Northern Illinois University. His current research interests include the development and resolution of interpersonal disputes and the exploitation and protection of intellectual property.

TONI MAKKAI is a Post-doctoral Fellow in the Research School of Social Sciences, Australian National University. She has recently co-authored a book, Drugs in Australian Society: Patterns, Attitudes and Policy with Ian McAllister and Rhonda Moore. Her current interests are regulation and compliance and the sociology of drug use.

HENRY N. PONTELL is Associate Professor of Social Ecology and Sociology and Associate Dean of Graduate Studies at the University of California, Irvine. He is the author of a number of works on jail overcrowding, white-collar crime, deviance and social control, and the criminal process. Currently he is conducting research on the nature, magnitude, and role of fraud in the savings and loan crisis.

2 ABOUT THE AUTHORS

CASSIA SPOHN is Professor of Criminal Justice at the University of Nebraska at Omaha. She has written a number of articles on racial disparity in sentencing and on the factors that influence judges' sentencing decisions. She and Julie Horney are currently working on a nationally funded study of the impact of rape law reform.

J. ALEXANDER TANFORD is Professor of Law and Ira C. Batman Faculty Fellow at Indiana University–Bloomington. He is the author of a number of books and articles on the law and psychology of trials. He is currently studying whether jury behavior research is having any impact on trial procedure.

WAYNE N. WELSH is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Criminal Justice at Temple University, Philadelphia. He earned his M.A. degree in Applied Social Psychology from the University of Saskatchewan, Canada, and his Ph.D. from the Program in Social Ecology, University of California, Irvine. His research has examined aggression in prison inmates, political correlates of jail overcrowding, and the impact of court orders against county jails.