CONFLICTING VISIONS OF REFORM
German Lay Propaganda Pamphlets, 1519-1530
Miriam Usher Chrisman

How are ideas communicated when a new ideology appears? Professor Chrisman examines this question by analyzing 300 propaganda pamphlets written by German laymen and women at the onset of the Protestant Reformation. The traditional assumption is that Luther's message was accepted with little change. Yet the pamphlets reveal that each group in German society heard Luther's message differently. While some followed Luther's doctrines, others followed Zwingli's; still others picked different ideas from various reformers, and some even created their own theology. Many enthusiastically presented their own interpretations of the Gospels to support arguments for social change. Professor Chrisman's book is the first book to present a comprehensive selection that includes 119 lay writers: knights, technicians, lower rural civil servants, urban patricians, learned urban civil servants, and artisans.

THE RESURGENCE OF RIGHT-WING RADICALISM IN GERMANY

New Forms of an Old Phenomenon?

Edited by ULRICH WANK

Translated from German by JAMES KNOWLTON

Rightist assaults on democracy have a long and malignant tradition in Germany. Recently they have again taken on compelling topicality. Today we are faced with the question: Is the new right-wing radicalism the same as the old? This book seeks to examine this question in a series of essays about the history and current status of right-wing radicalism in Germany. The topics include anti-Semitism as a constant of German politics (Julius H. Schoeps), the beginnings of National Socialism (Ernst Reinhard Piper), the demise of the Weimar Republic under assault from the right (Peter Longerich), the first crisis of democracy in the Federal Republic (Otto Schily), the present status of right-wing radicalism (Thomas Schmid), and the question of xenophobia in "Foreigners: Today's Jews?" (Bassam Tibi).
