amplified where necessary with further explanation either in his own words or in well chosen citations from the classic Commentators of St. Thomas and from modern moralists. As acquaintance with the previous work of this author would lead one to expect, one finds here brevity of expression combined with clarity of style—qualities particularly desirable in the treatment of a subject at once extensive and complex.

CHARISMES DE VIE SACERDOTALE. By Cardinal Bertram, Archbishop of Breslau. Translated by l'Abbé Guillaume. Editions Salvator; 22 frs.)

Bishops of the Catholic Church are so essentially in life's listening posts that when they speak they should be listened to. At the present time the group of German Bishops are listening to and indeed suffering so many things that a book by a German Bishop on how priests should speak and act and live is a document of first importance. We need hardly add that, by the group now responsible for our "planning" it will be looked upon as a document of no importance.

That the German Bishop's words have been translated into French—in spite of Versailles!—is an argument for translating them into English.
