

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

JOSEPH ADELSON is Professor of Psychology and Co-Director of the Psychological Clinic at the University of Michigan. He is coauthor, with E. Douvan, of The Adolescent Experience. Recently, his major area of research has been political socialization in adolescents.

LYNNETTE BEALL is a member of the faculty of the University of California's Department of Psychology at Berkeley. She is coauthor with Dr. Joseph Adelson of a forthcoming book entitled Political Thinking in Adolescents. Her current research interests include the development of an instrument to measure shame and guilt and a study of therapeutic versus illegal abortions.

THOMAS V. BONOMA is presently Instructor of Social Psychology at U. S. International University and is pursuing his Ph.D. in the same subject area. His areas of academic interest include the study of power and influence, conflict resolution, and international disarmaments.

MALCOLM M. FEELEY is Assistant Professor in the Department of Politics at New York University. His main research interests focus on the examination of judicial behavior and, more generally, the problems of compliance to law. He is presently coauthor, with Samuel Krislov and Susan White, of Manual for the Judicial Behavior Laboratory, written in conjunction with the Political Laboratory Curriculum Project at the University of Minnesota.

ROBERT S. GERSTEIN is Assistant Professor of Political Science at U.C.L.A. His major interests are in legal philosophy, political philosophy, and constitutional law. He is currently engaged in research on the subject of legal reasoning and the First Amendment.

SHEILAH R. KOEPPEN is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Minnesota. Her major interests are in political socialization, ethnic politics, and voting behavior in Anglo-American countries. She is currently doing research on children of "new left" parents.

FELICE J. LEVINE is presently a Research Associate at the American Bar Foundation in Chicago. Her academic and research interests lie in the areas of compliance, socialization, and related cognitive processes. She has recently been involved in various projects concerning social science and the law.

JAMES P. LEVINE is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Oregon. His academic interests are in the areas of civil liberties, judicial behavior, and American politics. He is coauthor with Theodore Becker of the article, "Toward and Beyond a Theory of Supreme Court Impact," in the March 1970 issue of the American Behavioral Scientist.

SVENN LINDSKOLD is Assistant Professor of Psychology at Ohio University. His major interest is in social influence, especially verbal communication and its correspondence with behavior.

BARRY R. SCHLENKER, a former Maytag Fellow in the Department of Psychology of the University of Miami, is presently a Research Assistant to Dr. James T. Tedeschi in the Department of Psychology of United States International University in San Diego. He is coauthor with T. Bonoma, R. B. Smith, and J. T. Tedeschi of the forthcoming article, "Prestige of Source on Compliance to Threats," in Psychonomic Science.

JUNE L. TAPP, Senior Research Social Psychologist and Program Director of the American Bar Foundation, is also Associate Professional Lecturer in the Social Sciences at the University of Chicago. Social Psychology is her major interest, particularly the development of legal and political attitudes through the life cycle in sub- and cross-cultural settings. She is coauthor with F. Krinsky of the forthcoming book, Ambivalent America: A Psycho-political Dialogue.

JAMES T. TEDESCHI is Professor of Social Psychology at United States International University. Interested in social power and influence, he is the editor of the forthcoming book, The Social Influences Processes. He is also coauthor with B. R. Schlenker and T. Bonoma of the book, Experimental Games.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This issue contains the first of a two-part series devoted to analysis of the concept of "compliance." It focuses on several of the more positive, normative facets. The second part of the series is scheduled to appear in our next issue (August 1970) and will focus on several of the negative aspects of compliance, including deterrents, sanctions, and coercion.