

Award Recipients

Académie Montesquieu

William B. Allen of Harvey Mudd College, Claremont, and Ronald Maurice Peterson of California State Polytechnic University, Pomona, were named Montesquieu laureates by the Academie Montesquieu, Bordeaux, and received the annual Prix Montesquieu for the most distinguished work on Montesquieu for 1986. Allen's and Peterson's conjoint papers represent the second time in the 45-year history of the prize that American scholars have been elected to the national honor. Because of the relation of Montesquieu to Bordeaux, the city in a mayoral reception joined in the recognition by conferring its silver medal on them. □

William B. Allen of Harvey Mudd College serves on the National Council on the Humanities. □

American Academy of Arts and Sciences

Following are political scientists who have recently been elected to the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Robert Jervis, professor of political science, Columbia University.

Roderick MacFarquhar, professor of political science, Harvard University.

Quentin Skinner, professor of political science, University of Cambridge (England). □

American Council of Learned Societies

The American Council of Learned Societies has awarded 91 fellowships and grants-in-aid for research in the humanities and related social sciences. Political scientists with their institutional affiliations and proposed projects are:

David L. Bartlett, graduate student in political science, University of California at San Diego; studies on Hungary.

John Clark, graduate student in political science, University of California at Berkeley: political limits to economic reform in Poland, 1968-1982.

Pawel J. Kotwica, graduate student in governmental and international studies, University of Notre Dame.

Michael Kraus, assistant professor of political science, Middlebury College: the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia, 1938-1948; the foundations of Communist rule.

Christine S. Schoefer, part-time lecturer in political science, University of California at Berkeley: public voice, literature, and politics in the German Democratic Republic.

James C. Scott, professor of political science, Yale University: political analysis and the hidden transcript of subordinate groups. □

Carl Beck Award

At the annual meeting of the International Studies Association in March, The Carl Beck Award for an outstanding graduate student paper was presented. The award was given to Carolyn Rhodes-Jones, an instructor in the department of political science at Utah State University and a Ph.D. candidate at Brandeis University.

Rhodes-Jones' paper tested models of bargaining reciprocity in the context of the GATT negotiations. It was described by Ron Linden, University of Pittsburgh, the chairman of the Carl Beck Award Committee as a "thoughtful and creative test of bargaining models in the context of international trade negotiations. The paper showed a willingness to submit theory to empirical testing in a manner which is bold yet controlled and careful in the evaluation of its results."

The selection committee included I. William Zartman of Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies and David Edwards of the University of Texas at Austin. □

Charlotte W. Newcombe Fellowships

The Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship foundation has announced the names of 48 graduate students who will share $500,000 in Charlotte W. Newcombe fellowships. The fellowships provide financial support for a full year of uninterrupted research and writing for students whose doctoral dissertations concern some aspect of ethical or religious values.

Following are the names of political science students, their institutions, and their dissertation topics:

Carol A. Drogus, political science, University of Wisconsin at Madison: "Evangelization and Mobilization: Politicization of Workers in Brazil's Catholic Base Communities."

Ezekiel J. Emanuel, government, Harvard University: "Liberal Political Philosophy and Medical Ethical Dilemmas."

Judith M. Kumin, political science, Tufts University: "Refugees Who Have Not Fled: A Novel Provision in the 1980 U.S. Refugee Act."

Dana R. Villa, politics, Princeton University: "Arendt and Heidegger: Being and Politics." □

Commander's Cross of the Order of Merit

R. Taylor Cole has been awarded one of West Germany's highest civilian decorations, the Commander's Cross of the Order of Merit, by Richard von Weizsacker, president of the Federal Republic of Germany. The award, presented on June 22, 1986, recognizes Cole's outstanding contributions to German-American friendship. As consultant to General Lucius D. Clay and the Office of the U.S. Military Government in Germany following the war, Cole played an important role in the political democratization and economic rebirth of the new Germany. His studies and recommendations in the fields of labor relations and civil service became the basis of major reforms.

Cole was a central figure in one of the first student exchange programs between Germany and the U.S., bringing 12 of the original 78 German exchange students to Duke University in 1948, where he personally attended to their welfare. Cole was James B. Duke Research Professor Emeritus and Provost of Duke University from 1960-1969, and a former president of the American Political Science Association. □

Council for European Studies

The Council's selection committee for Pre-Dissertation Fellowships has announced awards in the 1986 competition. Students of political science are:

Patricia Davis, University of Pittsburgh, "The Inter-Governmental Politics of Industrial Change in the Federal Republic of Germany."

People in Political Science

Richard Locke, M.I.T., "Strategic Choice and Its Constraints: Italian Labor Politics in Transition."

Annalee Saxenian, M.I.T., "The Politics of High Tech: Ideology, Organization and Interest in Growing Regions of the U.S. and the U.K." □

Furniss Award

Bruce G. Blair, guest scholar at the Brookings Institution, has received the 1986 Edgar S. Furniss, Jr. National Security Book Award for his book, Strategic Command and Control, published by Brookings in 1985. The award is made each year for the best book on national security research by an author publishing a first book.

For further information on the Furniss Award competition, contact Carole Dale, Mershon Center, 199 W. 10th Avenue, Columbus, OH 43201. □

MacArthur Foundation

MacArthur Foundation Fellowships in International Security have been awarded to 18 scholars from nine countries, representing seven disciplines in the social sciences, physical sciences, and humanities.

Following are the political scientists who have received awards:

Javier G. Alcalde (Peru), a political scientist, will study the economic and technical aspects of development strategies followed by the Third World after 1945 and then examine typical problems of several small-debtor nations in Latin America.

Mohammed Ayoob (Australia), a political scientist, will study the evolution of the superpowers' strategic balance, their projection of power in the Third World, their arms transfers and military assistance to Third World nations, and their economic influence over the Third World since 1945.

Douglas T. Blum (U.S.), a Ph.D. candidate in political science at Columbia University, will train in cognitive psychology and then investigate Soviet modes of strategic thinking, examining how Soviet and American perceptions of one another's behavior affects their policies toward each other.

Richard A. Deck (U.S.), a Ph.D. candidate in political science at Stanford University, will receive training in Southeast Asian studies and then do research on the creation of semi-autonomous regional economic and security regimes among newly industrialized countries, focusing on ASEAN as a potential model for the future of the Third World.

David R. Fagelson (U.S.), a Ph.D. candidate in politics at the University of Oxford, will study the formulation and implementation of U.S. strategic military policy and then determine whether an individual has a right to disobey military policy by examining how the institutional structures of military policy formulation fit into the democratic and legal processes upon which the individual's obligation to obey is predicated.

Michael B. Froman (U.S.), a Ph.D. candidate in international relations at the University of Oxford, will study British diplomatic history and European history in the late 19th and early 20th centuries and then analyze the assumptions and expectations underlying the concept of detente as it evolved from the Cuban Missile Crisis to the present.

Ronald E. Herring (Britain), a Ph.D. candidate in international politics at the University College of Wales, will study Soviet history, politics, and foreign and defense policy decisionmaking and then conduct a conceptual and empirical analysis of nuclear "blackmail" and related concepts, referring to similarities and differences between U.S. and Soviet perspectives and behavior.

Thomas F. Homer-Dixon (Canada), a Ph.D. candidate in political science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, will train in social psychology in order to conduct research on aspects of past and current U.S./Soviet relations, in particular exploring how the culture, ideology, and political institutions of each superpower have affected the formation of its collective identity.

Jack S. Levy (U.S.), a political scientist, will receive interdisciplinary training in decision theory which will inform his research on the causes of war in general and "inadvertent war" in particular.

Athassios G. Platias (Greece), currently a Ph.D. candidate in government at Cornell University, will study modern weapons technologies and will then examine the extent to which technology determines the selection of a military strategy in small states, comparing technology to international and domestic structure as influences upon strategy.

Yagil Weinberg (Israel), a political scientist, will study the structure and operation of multinational corporations and the ways in which they are influenced by foreign investment and national governments, in order to assess the role multinational corporations play in bilateral relations between adversarial states and the extent to which they promote nonviolent resolution of interstate tensions. □

National Council on the Humanities

David Lowenthal, professor of political science at Boston College, has been nominated by President Reagan to be a member of the National Council on the Humanities.

Other political scientists serving on the Council are:

Walter Berns (July 28, 1982-January 26, 1988), John M. Olin Distinguished Scholar in Constitutional and Legal Studies, American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research, Washington, D.C.

George Carey (July 28, 1982-January 26, 1988), professor of government, Georgetown University, Washington, D.C.

Ellis Sandoz (July 28, 1982-January 26, 1988), professor of political science at Louisiana State University in Baton Rouge.

William B. Allen (July 2, 1984-January 26, 1990), professor of government at Harvey Mudd College in Claremont, California.

James V. Schall (July 2, 1984-January 26, 1990), associate professor, department of government at the Georgetown University, Washington, D.C. □

National Endowment for the Humanities

The following political scientists have been selected for National Endowment for the Humanities fellowships, summer seminars, and summer stipends.

Fellowships for Independent Study and Research

Amy B. Bridges, Harvard University, Politics in the Cities of the Southwest.

Bernard E. Brown, CUNY Research Foundation/Graduate School and U. Center, Worker Democracy in France.

Michael A. Gillespie, Duke University, The Origin and Meaning of Nihilism.

Clifford Orwin, University of Toronto, Right in a World of Harsh Necessities: The Problem of Justice in Thucydides.

Fellowships for College Teachers

Miriam A. Golden, Wesleyan University, Innovation by Labor Movements: France, Italy, and Belgium in the Economic Crises of 1873-96, the 1930s, and the 1970-80s.

Summer Seminars for College Teachers

Stephen T. Holmes, University of Chicago, Origins and Development of European Liberalism.

Andrew J. Nathan, Columbia University, Understanding Maoism.

Austin D. Sarat, Amherst College, Ethics and Authority in the Legal Profession.

Summer Seminars for Secondary School Teachers

Irving I. Markovitz, CUNY, Queens College, Great Issues of Africa: Politics, Philosophy, and Literature.

Summer Stipends

Richard E. Foglesong, Rollins College, High Tech in Central Florida: Historical Origins and Philosophical Implications.

People in Political Science

Irwin N. Gertzog, Allegheny College, American Women in Politics During the Colonial and Post-Revolutionary War Periods. □

Richard Curt Kraus, University of Oregon, Political Controversies about Western Classical Music in the People's Republic of China. □

National Research Council

Thirty-six minority-group scholars have been selected by the National Research Council to receive one-year postdoctoral fellowships. Following are students of political science with their home universities, fellowship institutions, and fields of study.

Jorge Logan Garcia, University of Notre Dame. Kennedy Institute of Ethics: moral and political philosophy.

Huey L. Perry, Southern University. University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill: political science.

Joseph J. Valadez, University of Maryland. Harvard University: international affairs. □

Resources for the Future

The National Center for Food and Agricultural Policy at Resources for the Future has announced grants for 11 research projects and has selected five scholars for resident fellowships. The following political scientists will participate.

William P. Browne of Central Michigan University will complete a book-length manuscript entitled "Private Interests: Who Represents What in American Agricultural Policy?" Browne is a professor of political science at Central Michigan and coordinator of its public administration programs.

Robert L. Paarlberg, associate professor of political science at Wellesley College, will address "The Politics of Shortage and Surplus: Domestic Food Politics and World Food Trade." Paarlberg also has been awarded a short-term resident fellowship at the National Center. His fellowship topic is the distorting effect on national food production and international food trade of politically biased domestic food policies. □

Social Science Research Council

The following political scientists have been awarded 1986 fellowships and grants for international research from the Social Science Research Council, 605 Third Avenue, New York, NY 10158.

International Doctoral Research Fellowships

David L. Bartlett, Ph.D. candidate in political science, University of California, San Diego, for training in Hungarian and research on the politics of banking reform in Hungary.

Andrew M. Carpendale, Ph.D. candidate in political science, University of California, Berkeley, for training in preparation for a study of the sources of American and Soviet nuclear doctrine.

John Clark, Ph.D. candidate in political science, University of California, Berkeley, for research on the political limits to economic reform in Poland, 1968-1982.

Alfred J. Fortin, Ph.D. candidate in political science, University of Hawaii, for travel to Kenya.

Pawel Jacek Kotwica, graduate student in government and international studies, University of Notre Dame, for research on the impact of the Polish Catholic Church on sociopolitical change in Poland since 1955.

Richard M. Locke, Ph.D. candidate in political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, for research in Italy on labor politics.

Melanie Marion, Ph.D. candidate in political science, University of Michigan, for research in Hong Kong and China on cadre retirement in post-Mao China.

Biorn Maybury-Lewis, Ph.D. candidate in political science, Columbia University, for research in Brazil on the growth and transformation of Brazilian rural workers' unions, 1964-1985.

Leigh Payne, Ph.D. candidate in political science, Yale University, for research in Brazil on Brazilian industrialists in the transition to democracy.

AnnaLee Saxenian, Ph.D. candidate in political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, for research in the United Kingdom on ideology, interest, and organization in technologically oriented regions of the United States and the United Kingdom.

Seraphim Seferiades, Ph.D. candidate in political science, Columbia University, for research in Greece on party competition, political incorporation, and social cleavage in postwar Greece.

Thaveporn Vasavakul, Ph.D. candidate in government, Cornell University, for research in France, Vietnam, and the United States on educational policy and practice in North and South Vietnam, 1955-1965.

Grants for International Postdoctoral Research

Bruce G. Cumings, professor of international studies, Jackson School of International Studies, University of Washington, for research on the origins and development of the Northeast Asian political economy.

Robert M. Cutler, visiting assistant professor of political science, University of California, Santa Barbara, for research on the evolution of the Soviet press since 1953.

Michael Kraus, assistant professor of political science, Middlebury College, for research on the foundations of Communist rule in the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia, 1938-1948.

Richard Kraus, associate professor of political science, University of Oregon, for research on pianos and politics in China.

Hong Yung Lee, associate professor of political science, Yale University, for research on the changing elites of the socialist state in China.

Margaret Anne McKean, associate professor of political science, Duke University, for research on the Japanese experience with scarcity.

Elizabeth J. Perry, associate professor of political science, Jackson School of International Studies, University of Washington, for research on strikes in Shanghai, 1870-1970.

Christine S. Schoefer, part-time lecturer in political science, University of California, Berkeley, for research on literature and politics in the German Democratic Republic. □

Other Awards and Honors

Linda Carpenter won the Southwestern Political Science Association's annual award for the best undergraduate paper written in 1985. Her paper, "State Legislatures: Are They Accessible to Female Candidates?" was nominated by Henry Sirgo, associate professor of government.

Carol Swain, Ph.D. candidate, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, is the 1986 winner of the Donald Stone Award for the best student paper on an inter-governmental relations topic. Her winning paper is entitled, "Miles' Law and State Administrators: The Importance of Intergovernmental Relations."

Robert E. DiClerico, associate professor of political science at West Virginia University was one of six recipients of a West Virginia University Outstanding Teacher Award for 1985-86. Recipients of the award received a $2,500 cash prize. DiClerico also received a $300 cash award and $300 travel grant from the College of Arts and Sciences as one of five Outstanding Teachers in the College of Arts and Sciences.

Samuel J. Eldersveld has been selected as the College of Literature, Science, and Art's Distinguished Senior Lecturer for 1986-87 at the University of Michigan.

Melvin J. Hinich, Frank C. Erwin Jr. Centennial Professor in Government, University of Texas, Austin, has been named as the initial holder of the Mike Hogg Professorship of Local Government.

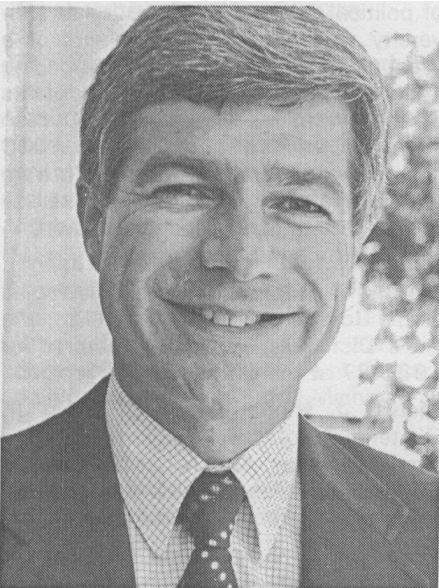

Theodore Lowi has been awarded the Richard Neustadt Prize by the APSA Presidency Research Group for the best work on the presidency published in 1985. He also received the Harold

Lasswell Award of the Policy Studies Organization "as an outstanding scholar contributing to our understanding of the substance and process of public policy."

Daniel A. Mazmanian has been appointed to the newly established Luther Lee Chair in Government at The Claremont Graduate School.

Joseph S. Szyliowicz, professor, Graduate School of International Studies, University of Denver, has been selected as the outstanding scholar of the year at the university and was presented with the Burlington Northern Foundation Award for "unusually significant and meritorious achievement in professional scholarship" at the commencement ceremony.

Marvin G. Weinbaum, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, was a recipient of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences Award for Excellence in Undergraduate Teaching. □

Daniel A. Mazmanian has been appointed to Claremont's Luther Lee Chair in Government.

944 PS Fall 1986

In Memoriam

Stefan C. Maczynski

Stefan C. Maczynski, associate professor of political science at St. John Fisher College, died suddenly of a heart attack on July 10, 1986. He was 61 years of age and was honored recently for having completed 29 years of teaching at the College.

Both his colleagues and his students will remember an outstanding individual whose devotion to academic excellence and ethical values was exemplary. As one of the most respected faculty members at the College, Stefan was very active in academic governance and served as pre-law advisor and coordinator of the Washington Semester Program to hundreds of students over the years.

Stefan was chairman of the department when he offered me the position of assistant professor 15 years ago. It was in large part due to my impression of this rugged individualist, whose humane values and compassion were clearly evident, that I accepted his offer and moved my family to Rochester, New York. Working with a man who became both my mentor and close friend has been a blessing for me. Although Stefan's background and ideological orientation were very different from my own, I deeply respected his perspicacity and confidence in getting to the core of complex issues. He was a man who marshalled his considerable intelligence and reasoning powers for just ends.

He was very proud to be a citizen of the United States. This was evident in his enthusiastic participation in my Jamaican-born wife's naturalization when I was conducting research abroad. Stefan became an expert in the theory and functioning of American governmental institutions which in his words "are the best protection free people have been able to devise." He was a man whose historical perspective and insight into the human condition was deeply influenced by personal experience.

Born in 1924 in Wilno, Poland, Stefan