Strategy for Conquest

Communist Documents on Guerrilla Warfare

Edited by JAY MALLIN

Foreword by GENERAL S. L. A. MARSHALL

Although unconventional warfare is not a Communist invention, it has become their most important lever for revolutionary expansion. Perhaps because guerrilla war inverts so many of the principles of traditional war, the Western world has been agonizingly slow to understand it.

In his timely compilation of the writings of communism's leading guerrilla strategists, Jay Mallin has provided a firsthand account of the purposes and tactics of the Communist brand of unconventional warfare. Including material that has been previously inaccessible, Strategy for Conquest contains selections from the writings of Mao Tse-tung, Vo Nguyen Giap, "Che" Guevara, Lin Piao, Raúl Castro, and others. From the editor's thoughtful survey of how events have borne out Communist proclamations to the fundamental writings of the ideologists themselves, this book offers the hard truths about the Communist threat in remote jungles and city streets.

The Jews in New Spain

Faith, Flame, and the Inquisition

By SEYMOUR B. LIEBMAN

Jewish people carried on their tradition virtually surreptitiously in New Spain for almost three centuries. From 1521 on they inhabited the area without interruption but—except for a few decades—illegally. The branches of the Spanish Inquisition that reached into New Spain from 1521 to 1821 left a vast legacy of documents that are priceless to the historian.

Professor Liebman has researched and translated many of the Inquisition documents, and through these and other sources has defined, described, and analyzed the personalities, lives, and customs of representative Hispanic Jews. Two outstanding families, those of Luis de Carvajal and Thomas Treviño de Sobremonte, are treated in full in separate chapters. Other chapters trace the colonists from their departure from Spain through their centuries of faith and flame in the New World.
