a comprehensive collection of data on southern American speech:*

LINGUISTIC ATLAS of the GULF STATES (USA) The Basic Materials

This new microform collection brings together data gathered from thirteen years of field work and 1,118 interviews conducted by linguistic researchers in the Southern States of the USA. The project which generated this data was based at Emory University, Atlanta, Georgia and covered Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida and Texas as Far West as Dallas, San Antonio and Laredo. Never before has a linguistic atlas of such wide scope been published and made available to students and researchers throughout the world.

Includes nearly 128,000 handwritten pages containing phonetic notation by just eight 'scribes'.

ENGLISH

as a World Language

Richard W. Bailey and Manfred Görlach, Editors

From Oxford to Liverpool . . . from Canada to Jamaica . . .
from South Africa to Hong Kong . . . English is the first language of more than 300 million people. An equal number use it daily as a second language. But in no two places is English spoken in exactly the same way.

Soldiers, missionaries, traders, and colonists took English to all parts of the world. In some places English became the respected language of commerce; in others, it was used as a tool of political oppression. In all cases its development has been tied to historical, political, economic, and commercial considerations, and by the balance between social stratification and upward social mobility. It was a tool of colonialism, and its use is being revalued in the face of new nationalist movements.

English as a World Language is both history and linguistic analysis, a product of the work of some of the world's foremost scholars of the language.

Standard Albanian

A Reference Grammar for Students

Leonard Newmark, Philip Hubbard & Peter Prifti. Since World War II, a concerted effort has been under way to agree on a single dialect of Albanian to serve as a standard language of the country. This volume is in large part an adaptation and translation of a comprehensive Albanian-language reference grammar published as a result of that effort. Intended for English-speaking students of present-day Albanian, it is not a complete textbook, but rather a book to be consulted for clarification and amplification of grammatical matters encountered during language study. It provides a detailed description of standard Albanian, with individual chapters on the parts of speech, as well as on such topics as numbers, conjunctions and clauses, particles, interjections, and gradation, comparison, and qualification. An introductory chapter offers a sketch of the country and its background, a history and classification of Albanian and its dialects, and a treatment of Albanian phonology. $45.00

Teacher Talk

J. McH. Sinclair and D. Brazil

This book, intended for teachers, explains how language is used in the classroom. It is based on many years of research by the authors and their colleagues, and presents the main results forcefully and with the minimum of technicalities.

The first part offers a general account of the structure of classroom discourse, seeing it as a special case of verbal interaction, adapted for its particular purposes. The second part concentrates on the way in which intonation is used to convey meanings in the language of teachers and pupils.

Accents of English

J. C. WELLS

An examination of the way English is pronounced in different places. Volume 1 provides a synthesising introduction, showing how accents can vary according to certain factors; and an illustrative cassette accompanies the book. Volume 2 and 3 examine in greater depth the various accents used by people who speak English as their mother tongue. Each volume can be read independently, but together they form a major scholarly survey of considerable originality.

British Black English

DAVID SUTCLIFFE

This is the first full and readable account of a subject of far-reaching importance. The problems of Black youth in Britain and the attention given to them have highlighted a widespread ignorance of the language, culture and experience of Black people. Few realize just how different Black speech can be from other varieties of English. When it is noticed it tends to be called 'political', as if there could be no other reason for it than dissent.

Theories of the Symbol

TZVETAN TODOROV

Signs and symbols have been studied intensively by philosophers, anthropologists, psychoanalysts and literary critics. Focusing on theories of verbal symbolism, Tzvetan Todorov examines the rich tradition of sign theory. He centres his book on what he sees as the radical change at the end of the eighteenth century, when the classical views of symbols, which had dominated Western thinking for centuries, gave way to the romantic view.

Figures of Literary Discourse

GERARD GENETTE

Figures of Literary Discourse is a selection of eleven representative essays in theory and criticism from Genette's first three essay collections. It ranges from structuralist poetics to narrative theory and analysis of the major novelists Stendhal, Flaubert and Proust, and offers a coherent, systematic account of literary form.

Liturgies and Trials

The Secularization of Religious Language

RICHARD K. FENN

This highly original book examines the fate of religious utterances within the institutions of a secular society. Religious language claims to be able to remake the world, but in courts of law is often tried but found wanting in authority and credibility. Using fascinating transcript material, Richard Fenn illustrates the efficacy of religious utterances in trials, and illuminates many current concerns in sociolinguistics.

Announcing a new journal...

Natural Language and Linguistic Theory

Editors: ADRIAN AKMAJIAN, University of Arizona
FRANK HENY, Groningen University
JOAN MALING, Brandeis University

Divisions among linguistic schools of thought have previously been useful in providing an impetus for diverse points of view to become articulated enough to be distinguishable in an interesting way. The field has however, reached a stage where common research goals are more important than divisions in arriving at a proper understanding of natural language.

It is the purpose of Natural Language and Linguistic Theory to provide a forum for detailed and lively discussion of theoretical research that pays close attention to natural language data, so as to provide a channel of communication between researchers of diverse points of view. The journal will actively seek to bridge the gap between descriptive work and work of a highly theoretical, less empirically oriented nature.

The journal is structured to include:

- theoretically oriented work on the syntax, semantics, phonology and the lexicon of natural language;
- interdisciplinary contributions written with theoretical linguists in mind;
- surveys of recent theoretical developments, as well as reactions/ replies to recent papers, both of which facilitate accessibility for a graduate student readership;
- special topic issues;
- letters to the editor;
- book reviews for important linguistics titles.

Effects of Number

A Study of the Grammatical Atmosphere Effect

J.W. MANN

1982. xii + 255 pp. Tables. Limp cloth.

R16

This work is a study of verbal behaviour. It centres on a type of grammatical mistake that has been attributed to a psychological influence called the "atmosphere effect". Although the particular verbal effect had been mentioned frequently, little had been done to establish its existence. The book seeks to coax the effect out and then to suggest likely explanations for it. After twenty experiments, involving more than eighteen hundred subjects, the author concludes that the effect indeed operates and that likely explanations for it are in terms of attention, memory or interpretation.
