

LAW, SOCIETY, and INDUSTRIAL JUSTICE

Philip Selznick

In this study of "private government," Dr. Selznick examines the interplay of legal ideas and social reality. He traces the emergence of new legal principles as older concepts lose their force and relevance. Analyzing the social foundations of industrial justice, he argues that recent trends have created a receptive institutional setting for the acceptance of the "law of governance." These trends are changing the character of administration, altering the claims asserted by participants, and erasing the distinction between public and private enterprise.

ON RECORD

Files and Dossiers
in American Life

Stanton Wheeler, Editor

American society keeps a vast collection of records on its members. Who determines what records are kept? To what extent do records follow an individual after he has left the setting in which they were gathered? What are some of the dangers and pitfalls in record-keeping? On Record, with contributions from a number of leading social scientists, provides descriptive accounts of record-keeping in a variety of important public and private organizations.

THE POLITICS OF CORRUPTION:

Organized Crime
in an American City

John A. Gardiner

What are the consequences of long-term corruption for the governance of cities already suffering from a host of other social ills? One official in the Justice Department answered thus: "The rackets destroy a city. People's confidence has been destroyed—that's what leads to riots. But the rackets can be beaten—we'll just keep on attacking."

In this classic "Wincanton" study, the author shows how City Hall and the syndicate actually work together and how the attitudes of the law-abiding citizenry allow corruption to flourish.

THE FAMILY and INHERITANCE

Marvin B. Sussman, Judith N. Cates, and David T. Smith

Two sociologists and a lawyer have made an empirical study of inheritance. The study shows a considerable sense of continuing kinship responsibility among the testators and a strong sense of equity among the heirs. The authors report on the social functions of inheritance and its processes as viewed by both clients and lawyers.

"We have a cure for crime."

"Justitia is ill-equipped to meet our current needs; it is essential that she remove that anachronistic bandage from her eyes and look around at the community she serves."

The authors' first premise is that our criminal justice system is a moral busybody, unwisely extended beyond its proper role of protecting persons and property; it should not be used to enforce private morality, particularly in regard to alcohol, gambling, drugs, and sex. But they go further and systematically present a program which covers the amount, costs, causes, and victims of crime; the reduction of violence; the police; corrections; juvenile delinquency; the function of psychiatry in crime control; organized crime; and the uses of criminological research.

Hardbound. 304 pages. $5.95.
Published by The University of Chicago Press.

"The prescription for crime control advanced in this book will not, it may be confidently asserted, be adopted by any legislature of the country. This is not because its ideas are unsound—indeed, it presents the distillation of the best thinking on the subject in the straightest talk the public has heard in a long time—but because the whole problem of law enforcement has become encased in myth, prejudice and narrow politics. Yet if hard sense and cogent argument can ever make a dent, surely this book ought to do it."

Sanford H. Kadish

The Honest Politician's Guide to Crime Control

Norval Morris and Gordon Hawkins

"We have a cure for crime," Morris and Hawkins boldly state. "We offer not a lightning panacea but rather a legislative and administrative regimen which would substantially reduce crime and the fear of crime."

"While I do not agree with all the conclusions of The Honest Politician's Guide to Crime Control, the approach is right down my alley. Indeed, it is the best treatise on crime control that has come off the press. In addition, the wit of the presentation adds much enjoyment to what is usually dull reading."

Justice Tom C. Clark

"If my book, The Crime of Punishment, persuaded anyone that something should be done to improve our control of criminal behavior, let him now read this eloquent and intelligent prescription of precisely what to do.

"It is an enlightened book written by eloquent juridical scientists."

Karl Menninger, M.D.

POINT OF VIEW:

Talks on Education

Edward H. Levi

"It is sometimes said that society will achieve the kind of education it deserves. Heaven help us if this is so," remarks Edward Levi in one of the lectures published here. Levi has served the University of Chicago for most of his professional life, as professor and dean of its law school and as provost and president of the university. These talks were given between 1963 and 1969 to various audiences of greater or lesser formality. They embody a basic approach to higher education—illuminating problems, choices, and directions. Throughout these talks, the reader will find expressions of Levi's essential belief that "the university must stand for reason and for persuasion by reason."

COLLEGE CURRICULUM AND STUDENT PROTEST

Joseph Schwab

An experienced and popular educator, Schwab is here concerned with the student and his needs both as a person and as a student. He sees the protesting student as a symptom of a diseased curriculum. From this diagnosis he proceeds through an examination of curricular needs and resources to a set of prescriptions: "practical," "curricular," and "community." The curriculum he devises is wide ranging and includes much that would be considered extracurricular; it is deeply traditional, yet in many ways revolutionary.

THE SUPREME COURT REVIEW, 1969

Edited by Philip B. Kurland

The Supreme Court Review is published annually to fulfill the need for sustained, disinterested, and competent criticism of the professional qualities of the Court's opinions. "It is this kind of stocktaking analysis—a look at where a series of case-by-case decisions is taking the Court and us—that will be the greatest service this publication can render to the Court and through it to society."—American Bar Association Journal, "... a work I have always found essential to my understanding of Supreme Court decisions."—Arthur Krock.

VARIETIES OF POLICE BEHAVIOR
The Management of Law and Order in Eight Communities
By James Q. Wilson

One of the most timely books out today looks at how “cops” act and why. What is the distinction between the policeman’s duty to maintain order and his obligation to enforce the law? What about discretion? Liberty? Physical force? How do law, local politics, public opinion, and behavior of offenders affect policing styles? How could police departments be restructured to better use police resources and manpower? Here are some straight answers.

“A welcome and sympathetic report . . . [given] with a kind of realism not often found in sociological literature.” — American Sociological Review

“Rich . . . full to the brim with increasing details and shrewd insight. Anyone who wants to have an informed opinion about the policeman’s relation to law and order ought to read it.” — The New Leader

Variations in Law-Enforcement Policy
By John A. Gardiner

“Shows the interplay of a number of related structures in the administration of community justice, the courts, the city administration, as well as overt and covert public pressures as influences upon traffic enforcement practices. Most importantly, the volume confirms a persistent public suspicion that no widespread, uniform traffic enforcement policy can or does exist from community to community in the nation.” — Public Administration Review $6.00

Law in Action

An important new series edited by Sheldon L. Messinger, Center for the Study of Law and Society, University of California, Berkeley

JUDGING DELINQUENTS: Context and Process in Juvenile Court

by Robert M. Emerson, University of California, Los Angeles

A detailed sociological analysis of the juvenile court in California, this book examines court personnel and their relations with those institutions comprising the court's working environment (schools, the police, churches, social welfare agencies, etc.); how these relations shape the court's activities, and the processes by which the court disposes of its caseload.

293 pp. $8.95.

SETTLED OUT OF COURT: The Social Process of Insurance Claims Adjustment

by H. Laurence Ross, Professor of Sociology and Law, University of Denver

Focusing on the sociology of insurance claims adjusters (who they are, how and what they learn, and why and how they respond to social pressures) as an occupational group, this book investigates law in action as it develops in the out-of-court settlement of automobile bodily injury claims. It shows how the negotiation process extends the law beyond the courtroom, distorting and redirecting it. 228 pp. $8.75.

SOCIAL ACTION AND LEGAL CHANGE: Revolution Within the Juvenile Court

by Edwin M. Lemert, University of California, Davis

Based on a detailed analysis of change in law and in the administration of justice affecting juvenile offenders in California, this book examines the way in which changing attitudes toward social phenomena result in pressures for change that alter social institutions. 240 pp. $7.50.
