INTERPRETING SPACE: GIS AND ARCHAEOLOGY

Edited by Kathleen M S Allen, Stanton W Green and Ezra B W Zubrow

'Interpreting Space: GIS and Archaeology, defines and critically examines GIS technology through general discussion and case studies. It succeeds admirably in meeting its stated objective of providing archaeologists with the information needed to evaluate, purchase and apply GIS technology to their work. The book owes much of its success to a decision by the editors, "not to let the GIS tail wag the anthropological dog." By reaching out into the broader GIS community and soliciting contributions on the general principles and application of GIS technology to the social sciences from such notables as Duane Marble, The Ohio State University, the editors provide the reader with a strong understanding of the role for spatial data and the place for GIS technology in archaeological research and practice.'

INTRODUCTION TO REMOTE SENSING

Arthur Cracknell and Ladson Hayes

'Remote Sensing is an eye on the Earth's environment: the key to the support of life itself. No wonder it is such a rapidly growing field....the authors and their colleagues at the University of Dundee are the creators of a splendid archive of a variety of remotely sensed data and expertise which they disseminate widely to other interested users.'
