

International Journal of Social Economics

An invaluable journal to economists world-wide

The International Journal of Social Economics presents social economics and social planning as an important and individual subject and seeks to provide a regular forum for the exchange of exclusive articles on major points of interest.

The IJSE is not merely concerned with theory. Its contributors and readers include leading academics, educators, and a wide range of successful specialists.

Economists will find this an invaluable guide to up-to-date research on the major ways in which economic decisions affect society, and their implications in action. Issues touched upon in recent issues include social economics, socio-economic systems, manpower policy, social indicators, environmental economics, income distribution and policy, social services and demographic trends. The first monograph in this series has studied job creation in Germany.
