

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

KITTY CALAVITA received her Ph.D. from the University of Delaware, Newark, and taught for several years at Middlebury College, Vermont. She spent 1984 on a Fulbright Fellowship in Italy studying worker safety and health legislation. In addition to safety and health issues, she studies immigration policy-making. Her recent book, United States Immigration Law and the Control of Labor, 1820–1924 (New York: Academic Press, 1984), is a historical and theoretical analysis of United States immigration law. She is currently a research fellow at the Center for U.S.–Mexican Studies at the University of California, San Diego.

ROBERT M. HAYDEN is a Project Director at the American Bar Foundation. He is an anthropologist and lawyer, and received J.D. and Ph.D. degrees from the State University of New York at Buffalo. In addition to his work in Yugoslavia, he has also done research in India and among the Iroquois in New York State. In September 1986, he will join the Department of Anthropology and the Program in Legal Studies at the University of Pittsburgh.

ELLEN HOCHSTEDLER is Associate Professor of Criminal Justice at the University of Wisconsin–Milwaukee. Her primary research interest is criminal responsibility. Currently engaged in original empirical research on criminal prosecution of the mentally disordered, she recently edited Corporations as Criminals (Beverly Hills: Sage, 1984), a book of original papers on corporate criminal responsibility.

TERANCE D. MIETHE received his Ph.D. in Sociology from Washington State University and is currently an Assistant Professor of Sociology at the Virginia Polytechnic and State University. His major research interests are in the areas of public opinion and legal policy, victimology, and the legal and extralegal determinants of criminal court sentencing practices.

CHARLES A. MOORE is a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Sociology at the University of California, Santa Barbara, and is currently teaching at the University of Wisconsin–Eau Claire. His principal research interests are in the areas of law and society and the American courts.

ROY E. L. WATSON is an Associate Professor in the Department of Sociology, University of Victoria. His earlier publication in the area of social control focused on professionals in the Juvenile Justice System of British Columbia and how they defined hardcore delinquents. His other major research interest is in the sociology of organizations.
