For my father, Richard Heydt, who taught me to put the greywater on the red roses – and from this and so much more you gave me, I learned about belonging with the human and nonhuman.