The fourth volume will be of particular interest to those teaching and researching in the New Testament field because of its strong focus upon the inscriptions of Ephesos; the volume reviews many other inscriptions and papyri as well. Comprehensive indexes are again a feature of this 300-page work.

Of the previous volumes of New Documents reviewers have said:

'The stated goal of the series is to provide a reporting service, but (Horsley's) commentaries are much more than that. They condense an enormous amount of information with grace and wit, and even when he is simply reporting there is usually an increase in clarity and focus; his personal contributions are always well-founded and stimulating . . . The utility of the series is beyond question, and for the vast majority of scholars it will be indispensable.'

(J.P. Murphy-O'Connor, Revue Biblique)

'N.T. exegetes will immediately become aware in the most concrete way of the use of comparative study of pagan and Christian texts . . . One cannot but welcome this Australian initiative to bring up to date Deissmann and Moulton-Milligan. The survey is competently made, the commentaries are concise and to the point . . . The initiative deserves warm support all over the world.'

(H.W. Pleket, Vigiliae Christianae)
