

ANNOUNCEMENT

Sixteenth Annual Ethnobiology Conference

Boston, Massachusetts, March 11–13, 1993

The Sixteenth Annual Ethnobiology Conference will be held March 11–13, 1993, at Boston University, Boston, Massachusetts. A special 1 day symposium on the effects of foreign contact on native populations is planned. With a diachronic perspective, papers in this symposium will address such issues as the introduction of new plant or animal species, methods of subsistence, foods and food preparation, and diseases and the evidence for changes in the native populations brought about by these contacts. Papers may cover prehistoric contact between hunter/gatherers and agriculturalists, historic invasion or colonization, or modern problems arising from such contact. Paper and poster sessions will continue through the following 2 days.
