NEW TITLE ON SOUTHERN AFRICA

Continuity and Change in Southern Africa. By Gwendolyn Carter. 1986. 117 pp. Softcover. $9.95. ISBN: 0-918456-57-6.

This new work by Gwendolyn Carter provides a highly readable account of the complexity of the politics in Southern Africa. Prof. Carter's personal experience and study of Africa has covered nearly four decades and has provided her with the opportunity "to learn at first hand something of the forces at work in...that period, and to discuss them with a wide and varied range of persons intimately involved in them." The essays provide a broad overview of the history and politics central to an understanding of the problems that face Southern Africa today.

From the foreword by R. Hunt Davis, Director of the Center for African Studies, Univ. of Florida:

The African challenge to coercive rule...emerges not only as a crucial issue for South Africans but also for the United States, the SADCC countries, and the world as a whole. To understand why this challenge has reached its current level of intensity, what direction events are likely to take in the months and years ahead, how the United States and other countries should respond to the trend of events, and what the long-range implications are, one has to get behind the headlines, the television coverage, and the statements of politicians and diplomats. For this, there is no better starting point than the published books and articles of Gwendolyn M. Carter.

Crossroads Press and the University of Florida Center for African Studies is pleased to make available this timely and significant contribution to the study of Southern Africa at a most crucial juncture in the affairs of that region. PAN-AFRICAN BIOGRAPHY

Robert A. Hill, Editor

Contributors include Carol Page, Ian Duffield, Rina Okonkwo, Herbert Aptheker, Robert Harris, LaRay Denzer, St. Clair Drake, and Allison Drew, with an introduction by George Shepperson.

There are those who purport that history is little more than the recording of the events in the lives of great men and women. If there is truth in this argument, then it follows that African and African-American history should, in some measure, be an accounting of the events in the lives of great men and women of African descent. Pan-African Biography, a new publication produced jointly by the African Studies Association and the African Studies Center, UCLA, adds to this accounting with essays about many great African and African-American men and women whose contributions to history have reached across Africa and its diaspora many times over; men and women who have provided a human dimension to the Pan-African fabric.

Pan-African Biography contains the proceedings of an interdisciplinary colloquium, "The Relevance of Pan-African Biography to the Study of African History," held in the Spring of 1982 at the University of California, Los Angeles. These essays survey the lives and times of many notable 'Pan-Africanists', including Conrad Rideout, Duse Mohamed Ali, Chief Alfred Sam, J. Abayomi Cole, W.E.B. Du Bois, Ralph Bunche, Constance A. Cummings-John, Mbiyu Koinage and Andrée Blouin. And while these essays are not the last word on their subjects, they do serve to push back the boundaries of ignorance where the lives of African men and women are concerned.

From the Introduction by George Shepperson:

"I envy those who are just beginning the study of the history of Africa and the African Diaspora the possession of this splendid collection of biographies of individuals of African descent who have made their marks on Pan-Africanism. What would I not have given for such a volume to help me to chart my way through the shifting currents of personalities and movements, of moods and aspirations, to which the adjective 'Pan-African' may be applied, when I first became aware of it towards the end of the Second World War?"

To obtain copies of Pan-African Biography, send a check or money order in the amount of $25.00 to Crossroads Press/ASA, 255 Kinsey Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024. Include 10% for postage & handling; foreign orders include 20%.

NEW PUBLICATION FROM CROSSROADS PRESS

Beyond Crisis: Development Issues in Uganda. Paul D. Wiebe and Cole P. Dodge, editors. 1987. Crossroads Press/ASA and Makerere Institute of Social Research. Softcover, 158 pp. $15.00. ISBN 0-918456-60-6.

Political instability, social and physical insecurity, repression and violence have repeatedly surfaced in Uganda over the past several decades. Leader after leader has crossed the political stage, but no national consensus or sense of direction has yet emerged. The crises through which Uganda has passed in recent years have taken a terrible toll, including loss of life, displacement, collapse of the economic sector, and attacks on educational and religious institutions. Once referred to as the "pearl of Africa," Uganda was one of Africa's most developed countries at independence, but by the early 1980s Uganda has to be considered one of the world's "least developed countries."

Development issues abound in Uganda. New approaches are necessary in reference to food and nutrition, health, education, economic and other issues in Uganda. Social infrastructures will have to be rehabilitated. Much will have to be newly constructed. Priorities will have to be established. The achievement of all objectives will depend upon the active participation of the Ugandan people at all stages and levels in the determination of their life styles and life chances. But such, of course, is the essence of development.

Crossroads Press and the Makerere Institute of Social Research are privileged to introduce Beyond Crisis: Development Issues in Uganda, a new publication which examines prospects for the future in Uganda. The essays contained in this new book are largely drawn from a conference held at Mweya Lodge in southwestern Uganda in April 1986. The contributors were Ugandan or others with long-term Uganda experience and commitment.

Edited by Paul D. Wiebe and Cole P. Dodge, Beyond Crisis is a timely contribution to the deeper understanding of the questions and concerns that affect development in Uganda today. To order copies of Beyond Crisis, send check or money order for U.S. $15.00 to Crossroads Press/ASA, 255 Kinsey Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024. Include 10% for postage & handling; foreign orders include 20%.
