The Rediscovery of Newman : An Oxford Symposium

St. Luke : Theologian of Redemptive History

Helmut Flender 32s 6d

"The author claims that Luke is an independent theologian in his own right, alongside of Paul and John. He argues that for Paul the continuation of history is meaningless . . . John, on the other hand, pays no attention to the continuation of history . . . Luke, however, in contrast, realistically accepts the 'ongoing world' . . . Students who are giving special attention to Lukan writings will need to study this book."

Thou Art There Also : God, Death, and Hell

M. C. Paternoster hard covers 27s 6d, paper 18s 6d

The present conspiracy of silence about death and judgment has for the author neither the old pagan's fortitude nor the genuinely Christian hope. He would have our eyes open to the classic Christian beliefs about death, judgment, and hell. Only so, he contends, is sense made both of living and dying. For the Christian beliefs presuppose the presence of God both in life and death, and beyond.

The Beginning of the Gospel

C. F. Evans 6s 6d

Professor Evans takes Mark's Gospel and from it derives answers to the questions—what is a Gospel? How are we to understand the miracles, the teaching, the Passion, and the Person of Jesus?

S·P·C·K Marylebone Road
London, N.W.1. 01-387 5282.

Gnosis and the New Testament

R. McL. WILSON

The book presents, in non-technical terms, a review of the present situation in the study of Gnosticism, and provides a brief introduction to the new Gnostic documents so far published, showing their significance, the problems they have helped to solve, and the new questions which they raise.

Introduction to the New Testament

WILLI MARXSEN

Translated by G. BUSWELL

Traditional manuals have often been overcrowded with historical facts which have tended to obscure issues of central importance for exegesis. Detail has therefore been strictly limited and comparison with other viewpoints has been sufficiently restricted to keep the material within reasonable proportions.

The Bampton Lectures for 1964

In these lectures Bishop Neill indicates some of the changes in theological climate that have been brought about by ecumenical progress, and suggests the directions in which he thinks that further thought and study are needed, besides rethinking his own ecumenical position. 63s net
