
 REVIEWERS

A. A. B.	Arnold A. Blake	F. H.	Felix Hoerburger
A. B.	Anthony Baines	J. S. W.	John S. Weissmann
A. L. L.	A. L. Lloyd	K. D.	Kathleen Dale
A. M. J.	A. M. Jones	K. P. W.	Klaus P. Wachsmann
B. K.	Barbara Krader	L. A.	Lucile Armstrong
B. N.	Bruno Nettl	L. E. R. P.	Laurence E. R. Picken
C. M. S.	Claude M. Simpson	M. K.	Maud Karpeles
C. R.	Cvjetko Rihtman	M. S.	Marie Slocombe
D. R.	David Rycroft	N. F.	Norman Fraser
E. D.	Erik Dal	R. H.	Ruth Harvey
E. G.-K.	Edith Gerson-Kiwi	R. P.	Roger Pinon
E. K. W.	Evelyn K. Wells	S. J.	Sara Jackson
E. V. de B.	E. V. de Bray	V. A.	Violet Alford
F. B.	Fritz Bose	V. K.	Victoria Kingsley

CORRESPONDENCE

THE BAGPIPE IN CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Dr. Milan Bartoš (Ústřední dům lidové tvořivosti, Praha) writes:

The critique of František Dobrovolný's work, Lidové hudební nástroje na Moravě (JIFMC, Vol. XI, p. 105) is written in a very solid and informed way. We have found there is only one small inexactitude. Reading the article one has the impression that the name of "dudy" is given to the mouth-blown bagpipes and "gajdy" to the bellows-blown bagpipes. But we do not distinguish in our language these two kinds of bagpipes. "Dudy" is a regional expression for bagpipes in Bohemia, "gajdy" for bagpipes in Moravia and Slovakia. In our days the more primitive type (in the evolution) of bagpipes—mouth blown—is used only in Northern Moravia and Slovakia.