Journal of Literary Semantics

An International Review

ISSN 0341-7638

Editor: Trevor Eaton
Academic Headquarters:
Language Centre,
University of Kent
at Canterbury/England

The aim of the Journal of Literary Semantics is to concentrate the endeavours of theoretical and applied linguists upon those texts traditionally classed as 'literary' in the belief that such texts are a central, not a peripheral, concern of linguistics.

The journal publishes articles on all aspects of literary semantics; articles of a philosophical nature attempting to relate the study of literature to other disciplines, such as psychology, neurophysiology, mathematics, history; articles dealing with the educational problems inherent in the study of literature.

The journal will also publish reviews of books whose subject matter is germane to literary semantics. Books for review should be sent to the Editor.

J.L.S. appears in annual volumes, each volume consisting of an April and an October issue,

On the Surface of Discourse Michael Hoey

This comprehensive and stimulating text will provide students with a detailed but manageable system for the analysis of all kinds of written discourse based on the work of E. O. Winter and his associates. The author worked with Dr. Winter for nine years and is therefore in a singularly favourable position to assess his importance for discourse analysis.
